FOREWORD

Profane History is for the most part a record of sin and scandal, of successful plunders and murders, it is a vast scene of crime and misery. The history of the saints, on the other hand, is the narration of the triumphs of God's Kingdom, of spiritual prowess and heroic virtue. Yet, whilst all the branches of secular history employ many pens, the history of the saints, which of all others deserves the attention of a Christian, is neglected and nearly forgotten.

The student who ventures into the field of Hagiology, the branch of history dealing with the lives and legends of the saints, finds that his footing is insecure and dangerous. To compile a complete Dictionary of all the saints who have been and are venerated in the Christian Church, is an undertaking the difficulty of which can be appreciated only by a few. The editors of the ancient martyrologies and their, very often, ignorant copyists, together with a number of fanciful Christian romancers have made such a snarl of the names, groups and stories of the martyrs and other saints, that it is impossible, in our days, to disentangle it.

Since 1885 I had collected a great deal of material, principally liturgical, for Mariological and hagiological purposes. In 1913, knowing the difficulties, and in spite of them, I undertook the task of compiling a complete Dictionary of Saints, or rather a manual of Hagiography, to fill a gap in English literature. In doing this I did not search any original manuscripts. For such a work I had neither time nor opportunity. I simply present the fruit produced by the labor of the hagiologists of the present day. When kings build, the hod carriers have plenty of work.

One of the main sources I used is the "Heiligen-Lexikon" of Dr. Joh. Ev. Stadler, printed at Augsburg, 1858-1862. It would, however, have been a fatal mistake simply to take up Stadler's volumes and furnish to the public an abstract of this work in English. Stadler is antiquated; he had not at his disposal the researches of the modern hagiologists, such as the Neo-Bollandists, Günter and others. Therefore I first gathered my material from other printed sources, such as Stanton, Barrett, O'Hanlon, Baring-Gould, Guérin, Heitemeyer, Seeböck, the Neo-Bollandists, Günter, Buchberger, the Catholic Encyclopedia, Nilles, Martinoff, Maltzew, Wüstenfeld, Lobineau and some others. Then I arranged my material in alphabetical order, sifted it, and compared my own catalogue with those of Stadler and Chevalier. Shortly before the manuscript was ready for the printer, I compared it with the "Book of Saints" of the Ramsgate monks.

Of paramount importance in gathering hagiological data of the Eastern saints, is the Annus Ecclesiasticus Graeco-Slavicus of the Russian Jesuit John Martinoff, which was published by the Bollandists in the XIth volume for October. Martinoff used an immense amount of manuscripts and printed books which were absolutely unknown and inaccessible when the Bollandists published the first nine months of their Acta. He gives the names of his saints in the form of a simple diptychon, but adds ample notes at the end of each day, particularly about the Slavic saints. I also made use of the Menology of the Orthodox Catholic Church of the Orient, published by the Russian provost Alexios Maltzew (Berlin, 1901), although the author does not lay special claim to historical criticism. His book contains a full list of the saints venerated in the schismatical Church of Russia.

Of good service has also been the "Kirchliches Handlexikon," edited at Munich by Dr. M. Buchberger (1907-1912). Its hagiological articles are, without exception, written by eminent hagiologists of the Benedictine Abbey of Emaus, Prague.

During the progress of this work two similar publications were issued: in 1917, "The Dictionary of the Saints," by Rev. J. L. Weidenhan, S.T.L., and, in 1921, the "Book of Saints," by the Benedictine monks of St. Augustine's Abbey, Ramsgate, England. The first of these confines itself to saints of some prominence and is written exclusively for edification; the second admits all the saints of the Roman Martyrology but only a limited number of others, especially of English, Welsh, Scotch, and Irish provenience.

It is the scope of my book to record all the saints who have been venerated in the Church of Christ and whose names can be found in the available sources. I have admitted all the saints of whom a cult exists or existed somewhere in the Church, even though in many instances, especially in Western countries, the veneration is popular only and not approved by the Sacred Congregation of Rites. From some sources, e. g., the Syrian Menology of Rabban Slibha, I have received all the names inserted, although some of the personages recorded there, e. g., some of the Roman emperors, enjoyed no cult, but were entered in the Menology because they have a claim on the gratitude of the Church. A list of the principal sources precedes the body of this work, which is a book of reference only, not intended for continuous reading. Monotony of style could not be avoided in the countless memoirs of men and women whose lives bear a great resemblance to one another, and in the long lists of saints of whom nothing is known but the names and, sometimes, one or two meager details.

It was not my intention to present a well rounded and perfectly finished sketch of each saint. I aim at no more than outlining the frame work of the saint's life, to enable the personages referred to be readily recognized, as the Ramsgate monks say. I never state that the personage in question "has practiced the Christian virtues in an eminent degree" or that he was "generous to the poor," etc., because these rubrics are axiomatic; they would have to be repeated ten times and oftener on each page of the book. I simply present all the known data of a saint's life and the particular line of Christian activity in which he was prominent. I have added, however, ample notices, collected from an infinite number of sources, of the liturgical cult of the saints. The Ramsgate Fathers and Alban Butler, not to speak of others, have given very little consideration to this particular and interesting feature.

The bibliography at the end of each article is rather limited. Any attempt at completeness in this direction would have doubled the size of this work. Ulysse Chevalier, in his "Repertoire des Sources Historiques du Moyen Age" (Paris 1905-1907) gives a full bibliographical list after each notice, also in the line of hagiology. The volumes of this eminent French archaeologist have been my mainstay during my long labors.

This book is not written principally for the purpose of edification. My first care has been a most scrupulous adherence to truth, the soul of all history, consequently also of hagiology. Writing about the saints I did not forget the beautiful words of Baring-Gould: "I have been called to tread holy ground and kneel in the midst of the great company of the Blessed; and the only fitting attitude of mind for such a place and such society, is reverence." Therefore, considering the numberless miracles of the saints and their wonderful stories, the proper spirit to observe is one, not of doubt, but of reverence and discrimination. Because much is certainly apocryphal in these accounts, we must not reject what is true. The present age in its vehement naturalism, places itself as it were, outside of the circle of spiritual phenomena, and is as quick to deny the supernatural agency in a marvel as medieval writers were to attribute natural phenomena to spiritual causes. Still romances and forgeries must always be exposed as such and must not be permitted to masquerade in the garb of truth. We would show disrespect to the saints if we allowed pious fictions and frauds to pass unchallenged. Therefore, in trying to give, as far as possible, truthful and reliable information, I could not help but declare some stories of miracles and other events apocryphal products of fancy, nay, deny to some "saints" their very existence.

But, some timid soul may ask, is it not dangerous to touch accepted traditions, implicitly approved by the Church and recorded in breviaries and official martyrologies? A decree of the Spanish Inquisition, issued November 14, 1695, prohibited the reading of certain volumes of the Acta Sanctorum, because the authors attacked established traditions, published by the Bollandists, as scandalous, offensive to pious ears, presumptuous, etc. But the lessons of the Breviary and the rubrics of the Martyrology are no better than the sources from which they were taken. The historical lessons of the Roman Breviary, for example, are extracts or summaries drawn from the Lives of the Saints, some of which were reliable, others quite the reverse. It is better that we ourselves set right such things, which do not concern faith or morals, instead of waiting for non-Catholic authors to set them right for us.

Comparatively few saints have received formal canonization at Rome. Popular veneration and the approval of the bishops was considered as sufficient in the medieval period, before order and system were introduced. Thus there are many saints whose claims to sainthood have never been authoritatively inquired into and decided upon. Even to-day there are names of saints in the diocesan calendars of the Latin Church, issued and approved after the reform of 1913, whose cult has never been acknowledged by the Church. The Sacred Congregation of Rites, in 1914, declared by a special decree that, in approving the feasts of certain saints, the Congregation does not intend to approve their cult.

It is not only the Roman Church which found it necessary in later ages, to centralize the process of canonization, but also the Oriental Churches in modern times have made special laws for legalizing the cult of persons who have died in the odor of sanctity. For example, the Russian Schismatic Church, in 1547, under Ivan the Terrible, reserved the right of canonization to the Holy Synod. In that year ten saints were canonized by the Synod for the universal Russian Church, whilst the cult of eight others was approved for certain dioceses. Since then many other holy men and women were raised to the honor of the altars by the Russian Synod. (Anal. Boll., 1919, 380 sq.)

And here I must defend myself for having inserted in this Book of Saints personages who have obtained veneration only among heretics and schismatics. I have been advised by men whose opinion must not be despised to omit all such spurious saints. But I insisted on my judgment, formed by an intimate knowledge of hagiological conditions, for these reasons:

First, this work is intended as a universal and complete manual of hagiology and therefore must contain everything appertaining to the subject, genuine and spurious. A reader, for instance, in a book of travel finds a notice about S. Tacla Haimonot, the reformer of monastic life in Abyssinia. He wishes to learn more about the man, takes up his Book of All the Saints—but, lo, there is no such saint in the book, because St. Tacla was a Monophysite. Or he reads that the Russian General Staff, headed by the Czar, before going into war, visited the shrine of St. Peter of Moscow; he wants to learn who this warlike St. Peter was, but does not find the name in the Lexicon of All the Saints, because St. Peter was patriarch of Moscow at a time when the Russian Church was partly separated from Rome. If I do not omit the names of saints who are mere products of fancy, like the Ursuline saints of Cologne, or the milestones and towns turned into martyrs, neither must I omit the names of men who are highly venerated in the liturgy of Christian nations which, “by an unfortunate mistake” (Pius XI), are separated from the Center of Christianity.

Furthermore, it is difficult to draw the line between Catholic and non-Catholic saints. Who of the numerous saints of Armenia, Russia, Servia, Georgia, Mesopotamia, Persia, Egypt and Ethiopia were Catholics, who were heretics, is hard to determine. Stadler's great Lexicon of Saints, perhaps inadvertently, contains hosts of heretical and schismatic saints. Some have crept even in official Roman Martyrology. S. Nicetas, the Goth (15 Sept.), S. Sabas, the Goth (12 April), S. Elpidius, the Courtier (16 Nov.), St. Artemius, the "Dux Augustalis" of Egypt (20 Oct.) and others were Arians. The great S. Lucian of Antioch (8 Jan.) is the founder of the system which afterwards found expression in the heresy of Arius. St. Elesbaan, King of Ethiopia (27 Oct.), the Hymerite Martyrs with their leader Aretas (24 Oct.) and Eutychius of Carrhae (14 March) were Monophysites. The bishops S. Flavian II of Antioch and Elias of Jerusalem (both 4 July) had signed the Henoticon of Emperor Zeno and died in exile under excommunication. Achatius of Amida (9 April) was a Nestorian. Still they are all to be found in the Roman Martyrology. The gallant battle which they fought for Christ and their glorious triumph caused the ancient Church (and in some instances also Baronius) to overlook the defect of their orthodoxy. Besides, of the Saints of Syria, Mesopotamia, Russia, Abyssinia, etc., many were orthodox, i. e., Catholic, but are venerated only by the heretical or schismatical religious bodies of their home countries.

I add here the words of the Bollandists, taken from the Monitum with which they introduce the Annus Graeco-Slavicus of Martinoff: "That we are Catholics . . . and that we are in everlasting enmity with heresy and schism, no one will doubt; but this will not prohibit us from recounting the deeds of those who were or seemed to be implicated with them. Also our predecessors did not hold themselves bound by such a prohibition, because in their 'Praetermissi' nearly every day they bring short sketches of separated brethren; the same they did with regard to the patriarchs of Constantinople, Antioch, Alexandria, and Jerusalem, and with the Roman antipopes."

For these reasons I have inserted into this Book the saints of all those Christian communities who have retained the Apostolic doctrine of the Veneration of Saints. To separate, as far as possible, the genuine saints from those who are spurious, I have marked with an asterisk all persons found only in the calendars of the separated churches and of whom it is not certain that they were in communion with the Apostolic See.

In issuing this book I wish to thank in a particular manner the men who have assisted me. Since liturgical and hagiological sources are scarce on the banks of the Mississippi River, I had to obtain a great deal of my information by mail. Besides, I took up the pilgrim's staff three times: in 1909, 1912, and 1921 I crossed the Atlantic for the purpose of visiting European libraries and archives. Unfortunately my time and leisure on each occasion were limited. To the librarians of the British Museum at London, of the Facultés Catholiques of Lille, and to the Bollandist Fathers H. Delehaye and P. Peeters, who on three different occasions gave me free access to their hagiological and liturgical libraries, I wish to express my thanks in an especial manner. I shall never forget the kindness of Msgr. Virili, who, in 1912 and 1921, obtained for me the singular privilege of spending many weeks in the archives of the Sacred Congregation of Rites to gather material on Marian Heortology and the liturgical cult of the saints. I also thank the librarian of the University of Chicago, who, through the Public Library of St. Louis, sent me the entire collection of the Patrologia Orientalis, which contains a great many Oriental, especially Coptic and Abyssinian, calendars that had been unknown up to our own day. I am also under obligation to the Jesuit and Franciscan Fathers of this city who threw open to me their libraries, as also to the many European prelates who, since 1886, were kind enough to send me copies of their diocesan Propria and Calendars.

MARTYROLOGIES

The custom of celebrating the anniversaries of the martyrs is ancient. For the East we have the letter of the Church of Smyrna, about the year 166, on the martyrdom of S. Polycarp, proving, at least for the Orient, the practice of solemnizing such anniversaries. Among the early Christian writers, two, St. Paulinus of Nola (d. 431) and the poet Prudentius (d. after 405), testify that in their day the tombs of martyrs were used as altars. These two facts, the annual commemoration of the saint and the celebration of the Mass over his relics, being established, it became necessary for cities and dioceses which possessed many saints to draw up calendars marking the days consecrated to these annual feasts, together with the names of the churches or oratories where they were solemnized.

Originally in the third century and the first decades of the fourth century every church had its own calendar, recording only the anniversaries of the local martyrs, whose lives and sufferings the church in question had witnessed. The feast of S. Lawrence, e. g., was celebrated originally only at Rome and only in his own church Outside the Walls. The people on his day would flock there in great crowds. The feast of SS. Peter and Paul, in the third century, was celebrated only in the Platonia ad Catacumbas, i. e., on the Appian Way below the present church of St. Sebastian. On the feast-day of S. Felix the little town of Nola, in the Campagna, became another Rome; for the feast of S. Menas large caravans of pilgrims wandered through the sands of the Libyan desert to his sanctuary. Consequently the number of feasts in the single churches, also at Rome, was small.

Little by little these local lists were enriched by names borrowed from neighboring churches. About the middle of the fourth century an ever increasing number of either newly discovered local martyrs or of saints from strange dioceses, whose relics had been obtained, or for whose cult some other reason seemed to exist, led to an assimilation and interchange of feasts between the various churches. This practice resulted in a calendar in which martyrs were received from all provinces of the Empire. Common to all gradually became the feasts of the Apostles (at least some of them), of St. John the Baptist, St. Stephen, and the Maccabees of Antioch.

When the era of martyrs was definitely closed, names of confessors were introduced who had been conspicuous by the sanctity of their lives and notably by the practice of austere asceticism, since nearly all the elements of martyrdom are found in the ideal of asceticism. At this period, after the end of the fourth century, also the name and the feasts of the Blessed Mother of God were entered in the official lists.

The first to draw up a tolerably full list of martyrs (martyrology), was Eusebius of Palestine, the historian. That he did this at the request of Emperor Constantine is a legend: equally legendary is the report that S. Jerome translated this Eusebian martyrology into Latin at the request of the Church of Milan. This catalogue of Eusebius has been translated, but it has come down to us in a very corrupt form. The original, as Eusebius wrote it, is unfortunately lost.

We still possess a Calendar of the immovable feasts of the Roman Church from the middle of the fourth century. It comprises two different lists: the "Deposition of the Bishops" and the "Deposition of the Martyrs." Among the martyrs mention is made of some African martyrs, Perpetua and Felicitas (March 7) and S. Cyprian (Sept. 14). But this list contains only martyrs who died after the year 200. Forgotten are the Protomartyrs under Nero, forgotten Flavius Clemens, Nereus and Achilleus, Ignatius of Antioch (who died at Rome), Justin the Philosopher, Apollonius and other illustrious men. This seems to show that, on account of the fury of the persecutions, the custom of keeping the anniversaries of the martyrs at their tombs was unknown at Rome before the third century. By the Deposition of Martyrs we learn which feasts were celebrated at Rome up to 352; the sacramentary which bears the name of S. Leo, continues the list imperfectly (the first three months are missing) to the middle of the fifth century.

The Calendar of Carthage, found by Mabillon in 1682, besides a great number of Africans, contains a goodly portion of foreign martyrs (nine Romans), and even of Confessors not belonging to the Church of Carthage. It was compiled in the sixth century.

The most important ancient text of an approximately universal martyrology, the fountain-head of all other martyrologies, was discovered and collected from stray leaves by Cureton, 1837-1847, and edited by Wright, in 1866; the errors of the first edition were later on partially corrected by Duchesne. The first part contains, in the form of a calendar, many feasts of martyrs from the entire Roman Empire, especially from the East, between December 16 and November 24. The second gives the names of Oriental martyrs, especially from Persia, bishops, priests and deacons, without any liturgical dates. Perhaps all these martyrs had one collective celebration. St. Ephrem tells us that a "Feast of all the Martyrs" was celebrated on May 13 at Edessa. The copy of this Martyrology, which was discovered by Cureton, was finished at Edessa in November, 411. No doubt it was compiled from a large number of diocesan calendars. The most important source was a list of martyrs composed at Nicomedia in Bithynia, Asia Minor (v. Achelis, 59). The author of this martyrology was an Arian; it contains the names of the heretic Arius and the Semi-Arian Eusebius of Nicomedia, but omits Athanasius, the Catholic Champion of Alexandria.

Adding some literary sources and a number of now unknown lists of saints, these three oldest calendars: the Roman of the Chronographer and of S. Leo, the Carthaginian and the Syriac, which by fortunate circumstances have been preserved, are the main sources of the so-called "Martyrologium Hieronymianum," falsely attributed to S. Jerome, which was drawn up in Italy in the second half of the fifth century. The author intended to create a universal martyrology of the Roman Empire. The Italian original underwent recension and addition in Gaul, probably at Auxerre, c. 600. All the manuscripts which we now possess are traceable to this Gallican revision (C. E., IX, 741).

The feastdays of the saints in this Pseudo-Hieronymianum have grown enormously. If Palestine was rich by the Holy Places of the Redemption and the tombs of the Saints of the Old Testament, other Christian countries possessed the bodies of the great heroes of the New Testament, whose tombs became famous shrines and attracted great crowds of pilgrims. The manuscript tradition of the Pseudo-Hieronymianum, however, is in inexplicable confusion; the idea of restoring the text in its integrity must be abandoned (Delehaye). It is such a disorderly jumble of names and incongruities, repetitions and later additions, that the Bollandist DuSollier says that there is perhaps no more horrible book in all antiquity than the Pseudo-Hieronymianum. The names of towns and persons are badly figured, especially when there is question of distant or insignificant towns, or of martyrs with Greek or Oriental names. Martyrs from different and distant localities are jumbled together into one group. Other names are repeated over and over; for in adopting foreign martyrs the selection of the feastday was left to the arbitrary will of the bishop. For example: the feast of S. Hermes the Exorcist, of Bononia on the Danube, was kept in his home town on Jan. 4; at Ratiaria, a neighboring town, on Dec. 30; at Axiopolis, on Oct. 18; at Hadrianopolis, on Oct. 22; at Ravenna, on Jan. 24. The name Hermes being found on all these days in the sources was thrown into some other group of martyrs, foreign to him. Errors like Coelifloria for Telesphorus are very common and occur every day; towns and milestones are changed into martyrs, etc. To give but one example: Eusebii Pamphili Pal. Mart. means: the memory of Eusebius Pamphili (surname), martyr in Palestine; in the Hieronymianum this rubric is changed into: Eusebius, Pamphilus and Palmartus, Mm.

For a long time the study of the "Martyrology of Jerome" yielded few results; it remained a closed book until 1866, when Wright published the Syrian martyrology and P. Victor de Buck, Bollandist, discovered that this Oriental martyrology was one of the sources of the pseudo-Hieronymian compilation. This fortunate discovery gave the first impulse to a more critical study of the document, and it thus became possible at last to form an opinion as to its true value and utility (Delehaye).

In the Pseudo-Hieronymianum each single rubric gives only the name of the saint or of the group of saints, preceded by the indication of the place where the feast is celebrated. But there is another type of martyrology, in which the name of the saint is followed by a short account of his life. These are the historical martyrologies, of which a great number exists.

"Hagiology" or "Sanctorium" would be a more suitable name for these publications, because they contain not only martyrs, but also bishops, abbots, virgins, matrons, and penitents. But the term "martyrology" is not unsuitable, if "we regard as martyrs all those who by their lives have testified to the truth." All the historical martyrologies to a certain extent participate in the errors and corruptions of the Hieronymianum. Their texts may have been somewhat better than ours, but they were already corrupted.

This new class of martyrologies was introduced into England, a country far away from the continental libraries, by the Venerable Bede, about 720. In the catalogue of his works which he drew up himself, he says: "I wrote a martyrology of the natal days of the holy martyrs, in which I took care to set down all I could find, not only in their several days, but I also gave the sort of conflict which they underwent, and under what judge they conquered the world." If we compare his book with the "acts" of the martyrs, we see at once that he took his account from them verbatim, merely condensing the narrative. He also used the Liber Pontificalis. Bede left many days of the year vacant. Later hands have supplied this defect, so that to-day it is impossible to know what Bede actually wrote. A monk of Yarrow put an extract from Bede's work into hexameters (Quentin, 120).

St. Bede's book has served as the immediate base of three martyrologies: those of Rhabanus Maurus, of Pseudo-Florus, and of Lyons. Rhabanus, Archbishop of Mayence, wrote his martyrology when he was abbot of Fulda. That of Pseudo-Florus was published by the Bollandists; the Martyrology of Lyons was first published by Dom Quentin, in 1908, from a manuscript of the first half of the ninth century.

In the ninth century, Drepanius Florus, a deacon of Lyons (d. 859), wrote a martyrology somewhat on independent lines, yet resting on Bede, to whose data he added considerably.

The next martyrologist is Ado, Archbishop of Vienne (d. 875). He says that before he became a bishop, he found and copied at Ravenna a copy of the ancient Roman martyrology, sent to Aquileja by one of the Roman Pontifs. He says that he based his own book on this Roman martyrology (Martyrologium Romanum Parvum). But this assertion is now discredited. The Little Roman Martyrology of Ado is not ancient; it was not the official book of the Roman Church, but only an extract from, or an abbreviation of, the work of Drepanius Florus, compiled after 848. The Frankish cleric Ado was probably deceived by some wily Italian. Although the Little Roman Martyrology is spurious, its influence is apparent in later hagiography. Ado has used all his predecessors, especially Florus; he has much new material, especially lives of saints, which he publishes in broad excerpts, wherefore Ado's work surpasses those of all his predecessors in size.

A contemporary of Ado was the great martyrologist Usuard, a monk of Saint-Germain-des-Près, in Paris (d. 876). He wrote his martyrology at the request of Charles the Bald, who was dissatisfied with the martyrology then in use at Paris. Usuard depends so much on Ado that his book may be considered an abridged edition of the latter's work. This is strange, as in his preface Usuard speaks of Jerome, Bede, and Florus, but makes no mention of Ado, assuming the semblance of an independent compiler. The martyrology of Usuard is so complete and pleased everybody so well that it displaced the earlier books in most churches and monasteries. Each church added its own saints, so that Usuard in each monastery or cathedral had his special "auctuarium" or appendix. Usuard's martyrology was first printed at Lübeck, Germany, in 1475. In 1714, the Bollandist DuSollier, at Antwerp, published a very complete edition of it with variant readings and observations and many auctuarialia.

The Martyrology of Notker Balbulus, a monk of St. Gall, Switzerland, written in 896, is a careful compilation, but never became very widely known outside the Benedictine Order. November and December are missing. Wandelbert, Rhaban, and Notker were never of much consequence.

The medieval martyrologists since Bede have honestly tried to put in place of the perplexing and confused mass called the "Hieronymianum," a selection of well attested names and stories. But since they also used the badly transmitted Hieronymianum, they took over much trash with many good traditions; furthermore, because they condensed the Acts of the martyrs as they found them, they introduced into their books, together with genuine records, also products of fancy and forgeries, and so put a partly falsified and not altogether trustworthy hagiological tradition in place of the ecclesiastical diptycha of Christian antiquity, which were used by the first compilers of the Hieronymianum.

The present Roman Martyrology is derived directly from these historical martyrologies. It rests mainly on Usuard, completed by the Dialogues of St. Gregory and the works of the Fathers; for the Greek saints it uses the menology of Sirletus. The editio princeps appeared in Rome, in 1583; a second edition in the same year. The third edition, 1584, was made obligatory for the Latin Church by Pope Gregory XIII. Cardinal Baronius revised and corrected this edition the same year. Baronius follows Usuard, with a few exceptions, where there was a reason to omit a rubric or to change a date, but enlarges him considerably. Baronius wrote for the universal Church, respected all provincial demands which appeared just to him, and introduced a great number of new saints whom the Church had produced since the time of Usuard. Thus the Roman Martyrology is by far the richest of all. In his additions, however, Baronius was not always fortunate. In 1586 he republished the Roman Martyrology with annotations and a learned treatise on hagiology. A new edition of the text and notes appeared under Urban VIII, in 1630. Benedict XIV also was interested in the Roman Martyrology; his corrected edition (1748) is in substance the one in use to-day. The last Typical Vatican Edition was approved by Pius X, April 23, 1913. But this edition still suffers from the errors of its original sources; it bristles with inaccuracies and needs a careful revision. In spite of the chapter of Cardinal Baronius "On the False Martyrs of the Heretics and their Pseudomartyrologies," it contains the names of some heretics, of martyrs who are milestones, and of others who were pagan judges. Modern methods now in practice offer the means of detecting errors on nearly every page.

In 1909 the Roman Capuchin Fr. Bernardino da Palmas Arborea, a Sardinian, of the Salesian Typography, commenced to publish a scientific commentary on the Roman Martyrology; before the World War six volumes appeared. I have seen the manuscript of the remaining six volumes in the cell of the good father; on account of the financial cataclysm subsequent to the war, he cannot find a publisher.

The latest "revised" edition of the Roman Martyrology, which was prepared by P. Pasquale Brugnani, O. F. M., and approved by Pope Benedict XV, on January 11th, 1922, does not, I regret to say, mark a decisive step towards the correction of the official Book of Saints, along the lines drawn by Fr. Bernardino. The revision does not extend beyond mere accidentals. "The outstanding fact is that from the point of view of historical criticism the old Martyrologium remained unchanged." (H. Thurston S. J.) The new book has retained nearly all the hagiological errors of former editions.

With the historical martyrologies of the Latin Church are connected the Greek Menologies or Synaxaria. They closely resemble the Latin books. The principal one is that of Emperor Basil II (d. 1025), published by Ughelli in his "Italia Sacra." The synaxaries are sometimes very long. Divided into months (12 volumes), they are read in the Greek monasteries at Matins, after the first half of the festive canons (hymns), together with a number of simple commemorations of saints whose "acts" are no longer extant. Since the critical and historical sense has not yet entered the Greek monastic houses, the synaxaria of the Greek Menaca are most unreliable and full of historical errors, apocryphal accounts and pious forgeries. But they also contain a great deal of valuable hagiological material.

In modern times a goodly number of particular martyrologies have been compiled. The most important are the following:

- 1) The African Martyrology by Stephen Ant. Morcelli, containing African martyrs for nearly every day of the year; Brescia, 1819.
- 2) The Belgian Martyrology by Molanus; this is an auctuarium to Usuard (Antwerp, 1573).
- 3) A Martyrology of German Saints, by Walasser (1562) and another by the Bl. Peter Canisius (1573), both printed at Augsburg.
- 4) The Gallican Martyrology of Andrew Saussay (1638), later on bishop of Toul. This work is very uncritical.
- 5) The Martyrologium Lusitanum, for Spain and Portugal, printed at Coimbra.
- 6) A Sicilian Martyrology by Oct. Cajetanus, Palermo, 1617.
- 7) Alexis Symmachus Mazochius published at Naples his commentary on the old marble calendar of the Church of Naples.

There are a great many more martyrologies, for example, those compiled for the various religious Orders (v. P. B., XVII 32).

In England there exist: a Martyrology of Christ Church, Canterbury, written in the thirteenth century and now in the British Museum; a martyrology written between 1220 and 1224, in the southwest of England; a Saxon martyrology, incomplete, of the fourteenth century; both manuscripts are in the British Museum. The most interesting is "The Martiloge in Englyshe, after the use of the Chirche of Salisbury," printed by Wynkyn de Worde in 1526, reissued by the Henry Bradshaw Society, in 1893. To these martyrologies must be added the "Legenda" of John of Tynemouth, A.D. 1350; that of Capgrave, A.D. 1450, his "Nova Legenda," printed in 1516, and recently edited by Horstmann, 1901; Whitford's "Martyrology," in 1526, reprinted by the Henry Bradshaw Society, in 1891; Wilson's "Martyrologue," 1st edition, 1608, 2nd edition, 1640; and Bishop Challoner's "Memorial of Ancient British Piety," 1761. More recently the Rev. Richard Stanton, Priest of the Oratory, London, has issued an invaluable "Martyrology of England and Wales," 1887.

"ACTS" OF THE MARTYRS

It is easy to understand that the Christian communities of old desired to possess written accounts or acts of the heroic confession and the holy death of their martyrs. The martyrs are the heroes of Christianity, and as the world has her historians to record the achievements of the warriors who have gained renown in the conflict for power, so the Church had her officers to record the victories that her sons won over the world and Satan. The saints are the elect children of the spouse of Christ, the precious fruit of her body; they are her crown of glory. And when these dear children leave her to reap their eternal reward, the mother retains precious memorials of them and holds up their example to her other children, to encourage them to follow their glorious example.

The first to institute an order of scribes to take down the "acts" of the martyrs, was St. Clement, the disciple of St. Peter, as we are told by the unknown author of the Liber Pontificalis. According to this tradition St. Clement appointed seven notaries, men of approved character and learning, to collect in the city of Rome, each in his own region of the city, the "acts" of the martyrs who suffered there. To add to the guarantee of good faith Pope St. Fabian (d. 250) placed these seven notaries under the control of the seven subdeacons, who with the seven deacons were placed over the fourteen cardinal regions of the city of Rome. Moreover, the Roman Pontiffs obtained the "acts" of martyrs who had suffered in other Churches.

In a stricter sense the "acts" of the martyrs are the official records of the judiciary trials of the martyrs made by the notaries of the court. In a wider sense the title is applied to all narratives of the sufferings and triumphs of the martyrs.

They may be classified as follows:

1) Official reports of the interrogatories. Those extant have come down to us only in editions prepared for the edification of the faithful. The Passion of S. Cyprian and the Acts of the Martyrs of Scilli in Africa are typical of this class.

2) Reports which were written by the martyrs themselves. They have the same authority as the "acts" of the first class. We possess a few, some of them amplified by later hands. Examples are the "acts" of the Africans Ss. Perpetua and Felicitas and Ss. Montanus and Flavianus.

3) Non-official records made by eye-witnesses or at least by contemporaries. Such are the "acts" of the Martyrdom of St. Polycarp and the Letter of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons telling the story of the martyrs of Lyons.

4) Documents of a date later than the martyrdom, based on "acts" of the first or second class and therefore subjected to editorial manipulation. The editor does not construct a story to suit oral tradition or to explain a monument, but he is editing a literary document according to his own taste. When the persecution was over, a narrative was made from various sources, fragments of judicial acts, reports of trustworthy men, etc. This class is very large, but its trustworthiness is highly debatable.

5) Of many martyrs the acts were lost: other Christians were done to death immediately after their confession of faith, without a regular trial. Of such martyrs the memory has come down to us in sermons, homilies, hymns, in the treatises of church historians, etc., like the story of the Forty Martyrs of Sebaste, the story of Ss. Hemeterius and Chelidonius, etc.

6) Many other documents go by the name of "acts" of martyrs, the historicity of which is of little value. They are romances, written around a few real facts which have been preserved in popular or literary tradition. Among these quasi-historical acts we may instance the story of St. Felicitas and her seven sons.

7) The seventh class consists of romances which are purely works of imagination, containing no real facts whatever, perhaps not even a name. They were the novels of the first thousand years, which unfortunately came to be taken as history. Perhaps such is the case with the stories of S. Barbara, S. Catherine of Alexandria, S. Boniface of Tarsus, S. Eustace of Rome, and S. Liberata, the bearded lady who was nailed to a cross.

8) The eighth class is formed of a number of Christianized pagan legends, as the story of Ss. Barlaam and Josaphat, which is the Christian adaptation of the Buddha legend, the Faust legend of Ss. Cyprian and Justina, the romance of Galaction and Episteme, etc.

9) A special category must be reserved for hagiological forgeries. To this class must be relegated all those acts, passions, lives, and legends which have been written for the express purpose of perverting history, e. g., the Acts of Ss. Placidus, the Disciple of S. Benedict and companions, Mm.

The critical study of the Acta Martyrum has been vigorously prosecuted within the last few years and the viewpoint of the critics has considerably changed since the attempt of Ruinart to make his selection of acta sincera. If they be arranged into classes according to their historicity, very few can claim a place in our first and second class. But on the other hand the discovery of texts and the archeological researches of De Rossi and others have confirmed individual stories of martyrdom. And a general result of criticism has been to substantiate such main facts as the causes of persecution, the number and heroism of the martyrs, the popularity of their cult, and the historic character of the popular heroes.

During the persecution of Diocletian there must have been a wholesale destruction of documents in which the Church lost the records of the history of her martyrs. This seems to be especially true of Rome, which in spite of the number and fame of its martyrs possesses so few authentic acts. The Romans had apparently lost these records as early as the second half of the fourth century. The poems of Prudentius, the calendars, and even the writings of Pope Damasus show that the story of the persecutions had fallen into obscurity. Christian Rome had her martyrs beneath her feet and celebrated their memory with intense devotion, yet she knew but little of their history.

Under these circumstances it is not improbable that the desire of the faithful for fuller information was easily satisfied by raconteurs who, having but scanty material at their disposal, would amplify and multiply the few facts preserved in tradition and attach what they considered suitable stories to historical names and localities. In course of time, it is argued, these legends were committed to writing, and have come down to us as the Roman "Legendarium." In support of this severe criticism it is urged that the Roman Acta are for the most part not earlier than the sixth century (Dufourq) and that spurious Acta were not unknown during that period. A Roman council of 494 actually condemned the public reading of the Acta (Hefele, Conciliengeschichte, II, 618). Subsequently, in 694, the Trullan synod of Constantinople excommunicated those who were responsible for the reading of spurious Acta.

Unfortunately the Roman martyrs are not the only ones whose Acta are unreliable. Of the seventy-four separate "Passions" included by Ruinart in his Acta Sincera, the Bollandist Delehay places only thirteen in the first or second class, as original documents.

III LIVES OF THE SAINTS

Finally there are to be considered the collections of Lives of the Saints intended for public and private reading. Most important of all are the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius (265-340) and his Book on the Martyrs of Palestine. Unfortunately his "Collection of the Acts of Martyrs," to which he refers in the preface to the fifth book of his "Church History," is no longer extant.

The fourteen poems of Aurelius Prudentius Clemens, published in 404 as the Peristephanon Liber, celebrates the praises of the martyrs of Spain and Italy; but as the author allowed himself the licence of a poet, he is not always reliable. The writers of the Middle Ages are responsible for a large element of fiction in the stories of the martyrs; they did not even make proper use of the material they had at their disposal. Gregory of Tours was the first of these medieval hagiographers with his De Virtutibus S. Martini, De Gloria Confessorum, and De Vitis Sanctorum. He is not always reliable in his statements.

Simon Metaphrastes ("compiler") in the 10th century is the principal author of the legends of saints found in the Byzantine Menologies. He made the best use he could of the materials. The often absurd stories in his Lives were contained in the sources from which he wrote; he is not responsible for these, since his object was to collect and arrange the legends of the saints as they existed in his time. Formerly his name was a byword for absurd fabrications, but his reputation as an author has been restored.

The most famous collection of the Middle Ages is the "Golden Legend" of Jacopo de Voragine (d. c. 1298), a number of legendary lives of saints, which soon became universally known as Legenda Aurea, because the people of those times considered it worth its weight in gold. As a book of devotion the work of Jacopo was a complete success, but from the historical standpoint we must reject it as entirely uncritical. That the work made a deep impression on the people is evident from its immense popularity and from the great influence it had on the literature of many nations.

All these medieval writers include saints of all classes as well as martyrs. So do also Mombritius (Milan, 1476), Lipomanus (Venice, 1551), and Surius (Cologne, 1570, De Probatis Sanctorum Historiis). Notwithstanding the liberties taken by Surius with the text of the manuscripts he used, his work has rendered great service and furnished many narratives concerning the lives of the saints that have been published in various languages.

An epoch in the history of the martyrs is marked by the Acta Primorum Martyrum Sin-cera et Selecta of the Benedictine Theodore Ruinart, published at Paris, 1689 (last edition, Ratisbon, 1859). Taken as a whole the collection is not surpassed, even to-day, though individual documents are no longer regarded as genuine by the keener critics of modern times.

Other collections of Acta, subsequent to Ruinart's are by Ilbachius, Acta Martyrum Vindicata (Rome, 1723) and S. Assemani, Acta SS. Martyrum Orientalium et Occidentalium (Rome, 1748).

By far the most monumental undertaking in the matter of hagiography is the work of the Bollandists, an association of Belgian ecclesiastical scholars engaged in editing the "Acts of the Saints." Their magnificent collection "Acta Sanctorum" is arranged on the principle of the Synaxarium or Martyrology, that is to say, the Saints are not given in their chronological order, but as they appear in the Calendar.

Father Heribert Rosweyde, of the Society of Jesus (b. at Utrecht in 1600), received the plan of publishing scientific lives of the Saints. In 1606, at Antwerp, he sketched the plan of his future publication in a small volume entitled "Fasti Sanctorum". after his alphabetical list of the saints of whom he intended to treat, he inserted the Acts of St. Probus, and Andronicus, which had long been considered a historical document of the first order. Rosweyde's plan required for its completion the publication of eighteen folio volumes, comprising three introductory, twelve Lives of Saints, one volume of martyrologies, and two volumes of notes and indices. He collected much material, especially from Belgian libraries, and, in 1615, published the Vitæ Patrum (Fathers of the Desert), followed in 1617 by a Flemish translation; but at the time of his death (1629) not a page of the Acta Sanctorum was ready for the printer. The superiors of the Society of Jesus in Belgium assigned the task of examining the papers left by Rosweyde at the Professed House at Antwerp to Father John Bollandus (b. at Tirlemont in Aug., 1596). He was thirty-six years of age when he began his work.

Rosweyde's project had included only the saints whose acts were extant. Bollandus began by enlarging this scheme. He decided to treat all the saints whose cult could be established; also, not to separate the annotations from the text. But, as the materials accumulated, he saw that the undertaking was beyond the strength of one man and that he must be given an assistant. Father Godfrey Henschenius (b. in 1601), a pupil of Bollandus, was chosen in 1635. After conscientious preparation and close collaboration, there appeared, at last, in 1643, fourteen years after the death of Rosweyde, the two huge volumes for January. The publication was hailed with enthusiasm by the world of scholars. Shortly after Bollandus established at the Antwerp house the Bollandist Museum, the workshop which was to witness so many labors and from which were to be issued the fifty volumes of the series printed at Antwerp.

In 1658 there appeared the three volumes for February, which further increased the reputation of the two authors. Pope Alexander VII wished to welcome them at Rome. Bollandus begged to be excused on account of his health, and, in 1660, sent instead Father Henschenius, together with a new collaborator who had just been appointed. This was Daniel Papebroch (Van Papenbroeck, b. at Antwerp, in 1628). Papebroch was to become the Bollandist par excellence. His collaboration begins with the first volume for March. The three volumes for this month appeared together in 1668, those for April, in like number, in 1675; then, in 1680, the first three volumes for May, in 1685 and 1688 the four remaining volumes for May. The first five volumes for June were issued separately in 1695, 1698, 1701, 1707, and 1709. The following Fathers worked on the publication: J. Ravensteyn (1670-1675), Daniel Cardon (1675-1678), C. Janninek (1679-1681), and Baert (1681); in the same year Henschenius died; Bollandus had died in 1665. N. Raye came to Antwerp in 1697 and, in 1698, was replaced by F. Verhoeven, who died in 1701. Papebroch, sick and nearly blind, was alone; there was indeed good reason to fear for the future, until, in 1702, Father J. B. Sollierius (DuSollier) filled the place left vacant by P. Verhoeven. His commentaries are scattered through the seven volumes for July and the first three volumes for August. His chief work was the edition of the Martyrology of Usuard, published in the June supplements. For twenty years DuSollier administered the material concerns of the work. In 1713, Father Pinius was appointed to share the burden, and, when Father Baert died, in 1719, Father Cuperus was sent to succeed him. His name occurs often in the volumes for August.

The publication continued regularly up to the third volume for October, which appeared in 1770. The suppression of the Society brought about a crisis in which the work nearly foundered. The Bollandists then in office were Corn. De Bue, James De Bue, and Ign. Hubens. After various tiresome conferences, in 1778, the Bollandists, together with their libraries, removed to the abbey of Caudenberg at Brussels. Under this new condition of things there appeared, in 1780, volume IV for October, and, in 1786, volume V. For a while some Benedictines assisted in the work.

After the abbey of Caudenberg was suppressed in 1786, the Bollandist library, in 1789, was brought to the Premonstratensian abbey of Tongerlo, where the sixth volume for October appeared, in 1794. The same year Belgium was invaded by French troops, priests and religious were hunted like criminals, and the work of the Bollandists was suppressed. Part of the treasures of the library were concealed in the homes of neighboring peasants, and the rest, hastily piled into wagons, was taken to Westphalia. What remained of the library was restored to Tangerloo abbey after the storm. In 1825, as all hope of resuming the work seemed lost, the canons of Tangerloo disposed of a great many of the books and manuscripts at public sale.

When, in 1836, it was learned that a hagiographical society in France was forming for the resumption of the work of the Bollandists, indignation was aroused in Belgium that a work which had come to be regarded as a national glory, should pass into the hands of the French. The provincial of the Belgian Jesuits, in 1839, appointed for the undertaking four Fathers, who were to reside at the college of St. Michael at Brussels. With the assistance of the government, the work was slowly resumed, and a new library was formed. The first volume published after the resurrection of Bollandism, vol. VII for October, appeared in 1845. The latest volume, the third for November, was issued in 1910. Since 1882 the Bollandists publish a quarterly review, formerly an annual volume of 640 pages, called Analecta Bollandiana, to make known to the learned public materials recently discovered which either complete the Acts published in the volumes already printed, or enrich the mass of material to be edited in future.

During the World War the editors of the Acta Sanctorum were reduced to a state of almost complete inaction. The end of the war found the Society of the Bollandists in financial straits and reduced to two members, Fathers Hippolyte Delehay and Paul Peeters. A large store of materials has been accumulated for the remaining volumes and for the Analecta Bollandiana. Naturally the earlier volumes of the Acta Sanctorum are very incomplete and deserve to be entirely recast and greatly amplified.

The principle on which the Bollandists have worked is an excellent one. They have not themselves written the Lives of the Saints, but published every available record and all the ancient acts and lives that are extant. Thus their work is a storehouse of historical materials, each group prefixed by an introductory essay on the value and genuineness of the materials and on the chronology of the saint's life.

Naturally the Bollandists in their commentaries destroyed certain pious illusions and attacked traditions which had been approved by popes and recorded in breviaries and martyrologies. Therefore the Spanish Inquisition, in 1695, issued a decree against the Acta of March, April, and May, forbidding the reading and sale of these volumes, because they contain "propositions which are erroneous, heretical, savoring of schism, perilous in matters of faith, scandalous, offensive to pious ears, seditious, rash, audacious, presumptuous, gravely offensive to several of the popes and the Holy See, to the Sacred Congregation of Rites, to the Breviary and to the Roman Martyrology, minimizing the virtues of several saints and of many writers, and containing as well many disrespectful statements regarding several of the Fathers of the Church and weighty ecclesiastical theologians." After long discussions, in January, 1715, to the surprise of the public, a decree revoking the condemnation of 1695 was posted at the church doors of Madrid. But, up to this day, there remains a large number of men who claim that no one has a right to cast doubt on pious legends.

Another valuable repository of the Lives of Saints is Mabillon's Collection of the Acts of the Saints of the Order of S. Benedict, in nine volumes, published 1668-1701.

In 1860 appeared the third edition of an extensive collection of the Lives of the Saints, called: Les Petits Bollandistes, Vies des Saints de l'Ancien et du Nouveau Testament, etc., by Msgr. Paul Guérin (7th and last edition in 17 vol., 1888). It is a compilation of a most uncritical character, but there are to be found here and there in this work some items of information which may, after they have been verified, prove to be of service.

From 1756 was published in London The Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs, and Other Principal Saints by Alban Butler, then chaplain to the Duke of Norfolk. It contains biographies of more than 1,600 saints, arranged according to the Calendar, and is a monument of patient research. The work has been translated into French, Spanish, and German. It is written in the sober spirit of his age, not uncritical, but thoroughly Catholic. Up to our days it is the standard work on hagiology in the English language.

In 1872, the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M. A., a minister of the Anglican Church, published the first edition of The Lives of the Saints (last edition, 1914, in 16 volumes). He used his best endeavors to be accurate, having had recourse to all such modern critical works as were accessible to him, for the determining of dates and the estimation of authorities. At the head of every article is stated the authority for the Life, to which the reader is referred for fuller details.

Guérin (Petits Bollandistes, XVIII, pp. 99 sqq.) gives a long catalogue of authors who have published volumes of national hagiography. Some of the more important of these are the following:

For Great Britain: the Augustinian John Capgrave (d. 1484) published a Legend of the Saints of England, printed at Canterbury in 1516. Dempster, in his History of the Scottish people, gives a great many hagiological memories of the Scottish Saints (Edinburgh, 1828). John Colgan, O. F. M., printed in four large volumes the Acts of the Irish Saints (1645 sqq.).

For France and Belgium, besides the already mentioned unreliable Martyrology of Saus-say, M. Charles Barthelmy undertook the publication of the Lives of All the Saints of France (1860 sqq.). Molanus of Louvain compiled the Natales Sanctorum Belgii, published after his death, in 1597. Well known are the critical Acta Sanctorum Belgii by Jos. Ghesquière, of Courtrai, one of the Bollandists (d. 1802); this work is not yet finished.

For Germany, Peter Cratopol, O. F. M., in 1592 issued a Collection of the First Saints of Germany; Rader, in 1615, published his Bavaria Sancta; Benedict Pilwein, in 1822, finished his Legends of the Patrons Honored in Austria and Hungary.

For Italy the Servite Ferrari published a Catalogue of the Saints of Italy (1613); Ughelli, in 1644, his Italia Sacra; Octave Cajetano (d. 1620) the Lives of the Saints of Sicily, a work which was published thirty-seven years after his death by the Jesuit John of Salerno.

For Spain, Juan Tamayo de Salazar, Vicar General of Avila (d. 1662), composed a Martyrology of the Saints of Spain in six volumes: it is a receptacle for the fabulous traditions of his country, repudiated even in Spain by all true scholars. The Spanish Church has adopted all the saints of uncertain provenience in the medieval martyrologies and assigned them to some Spanish or Portuguese town. Francis de Bivar, O. Cist., in his commentary on the spurious chronicle of Flavius Dexter, was an adept in propagating these forgeries.

We mention here the following eminent modern collections:

A Menology of England and Wales, or, Brief Memorials of the Ancient British and English Saints, arranged according to the Calendar, together with the Martyrs of the 16th and 17th centuries, by Richard Stanton, Priest of the Oratory, London, 1887.

Lives of the British Saints, the Saints of Wales and Cornwall, and Irish Saints such as have Dedications in Britain, by S. Baring-Gould and John Fisher, in four volumes, London, 1907.

Lives of the Irish Saints, Compiled from Calendars, Martyrologies and Various Sources, by the Rev. John O'Hanlon, Dublin, 1875 sqq. Unfortunately the death of Canon O'Hanlon, the World War and subsequent events have delayed the completion of this large collection.

A Calendar of Scottish Saints, by Dom Michael Barrett, O.S.B., Fort Augustus Abbey Press, 1904.

Irish Saints in Great Britain, by the Rt. Rev. Patrick F. Moran, D.D., Bishop of Ossory, Dublin, 1879.

Les Vies des Saints de Bretagne, par Dom Guy-Alexis Lobineau, O.S.B., nouvelle édition par M. l'Abbé Tresvaux, Paris, 1836.

Die Heiligen Deutschlands, von Ferdinand Heitemeyer, Paderborn, 1889.

BEATIFICATION AND CANONIZATION

The origin of beatification and canonization must be sought in the Catholic doctrine of the worship, invocation, and intercession of the saints. It must be obvious, however, that, while private moral certainty of their sanctity and possession of heavenly glory may suffice for private veneration of the saints, it cannot suffice for public and common acts of worship. It follows naturally that for the public veneration of the saints the ecclesiastical authority of the pastors and rulers of the Church was constantly required. The Church had at heart the honor of the martyrs, but she did not therefore grant liturgical honors indiscriminately to all who had apparently died for the faith. The bishop inquired into the motive of a martyr's death, and finding he had died for the faith, permitted his cult and sent his name with an account of his martyrdom to other churches.

The worship of confessors—i. e., those who died peacefully after a life of heroic virtue—is not as ancient as that of the martyrs. It was in the last decades of the fourth century when the Syrians commenced to celebrate some feasts in honor of their ascetes, as is commonly held, that confessors were first given public ecclesiastical honor. In the fifth century this custom spread everywhere. The so-called martyrology of S. Jerome contains the feasts of the Stylite Simeon, the hermit S. Antony and the Abbot S. Benedict. The reason of this veneration doubtless lies in the resemblance of the confessors' self-denying and heroically virtuous lives to the sufferings of the martyrs. Shortly after bishops who were known for the sanctity of their lives, also received honors after death, similar to those of the martyrs. e. g., S. Basil (d. 379), S. Meletius of Constantinople (d. 381), S. Hilary of Poitiers (d. 367), S. Martin of Tours (d. 397), and others.

The honor decreed to martyrs and confessors by the bishops was given for the local territory over which the grantors held jurisdiction. It was only the Bishop of Rome's acceptance of the cult that made it universal. Abuses, however, crept into this form of discipline, resulting from popular indiscretions as well as from carelessness on the part of some bishops in inquiring into the lives of those whom they permitted to be honored as saints. Towards the close of the eleventh century the popes found it necessary to restrict episcopal authority on this point and decreed that the virtues and miracles of persons proposed for public veneration should be examined in council, more particularly in general councils. As the decretal did not put an end to all controversy, and some bishops did not obey it in as far as it regarded beatification, Urban VIII, in 1634, published a Bull which put an end to all discussion by reserving to the Holy See exclusively not only its immemorial right of canonization, but also that of beatification.

Canonization creates a cult which is universal and obligatory. But in imposing this obligation, the pope may, and does, use one of two methods, each constituting a new species of canonization, i. e., formal canonization and equivalent canonization. Formal canonization occurs when the cult is prescribed in an explicit and definite decision, after due judicial process and the ceremonies usual in such cases. Equivalent canonization occurs when the pope, omitting the judicial process and the ceremonies, orders some servant of God to be venerated in the Universal Church: this happens when a saint has been the object of veneration from a remote period, when his heroic virtues (or martyrdom) and miracles are related by reliable historians, and the fame of his miraculous intercession is uninterrupted. Many examples of such canonizations are to be found in Benedict XIV's book on canonization: Ss. Romuald, Norbert, Bruno, Peter Nolaseo, Raymond the Unborn, John of Matha, Felix of Valois, Queen Margaret, King Stephen, Wenceslas, etc.

PRESENT PROCEDURE IN CAUSES OF BEATIFICATION AND CANONIZATION

We must first distinguish the causes of martyrs from those of confessors or virgins, since the method followed is not entirely identical in both cases.

A) The Beatification of Confessors

In order to secure beatification (the most important and difficult step in the process of canonization) the regular procedure is as follows:

1) Choosing of a vice-postulator by the postulator-general of the cause, to promote all the judicial inquiries necessary in places outside of Rome. Such inquiries are instituted by the local episcopal authority.

2) The preparation of the inquiries (processus), all of which are carried on by the ordinary episcopal authority. They are of three kinds: Informative inquiries regard the reputation for sanctity and miracles of the servants of God, not only in general, but also in particular instances. Processes de non cultu are instituted to prove that the decrees of Urban VIII regarding the prohibition of public worship of servants of God before their beatification have been obeyed; they are generally conducted by the bishop of the place where the relics of the servant of God are preserved. Other inquiries are known as processiculi diligentiarum and have for their object the writings attributed to the person whose beatification is in question; they vary in number according to the dioceses where such writings are found, and may not be judicially executed before an "Instruction" is obtained from the Promotor of the Faith by the postulator-general and by him sent to the bishop.

3) The results of all these inquiries are sent to Rome, to the Congregation of Rites, in charge of a messenger (portitor) chosen by the judges, or in some other safe way, in case a rescript of the Congregation dispenses from the obligation of sending a messenger.

4) The documents are translated, if necessary, into Italian, a public copy is made, and a cardinal is deputed by the pope as relator or ponens of the cause, for all of which steps rescripts of the Congregation, confirmed by the pope, must be obtained.

5) The writings of the servant of God are next revised by theologians appointed by the cardinal relator himself, authorized so to act by a special rescript. Meanwhile, the advocate and the procurator of the cause chosen by the postulator-general, have prepared all the documents that concern the introduction of the cause (positio super introductione causæ). These consist of

a) a summary of the informative processes,

b) an information,

c) answers to the observations or difficulties of the Promotor of the Faith sent by him to the postulator.

6) This collection of documents (positio) is printed and distributed to the cardinals of the Congregation of Rites forty days before the date assigned for their discussion.

7) If nothing contrary to faith and morals is found in the writings of the servant of God a decree is published authorizing further action, i. e., the discussion of the matter of appointment or non-appointment of a commission for the introduction of the cause.

8) At the time fixed by the Congregation of Rites an ordinary meeting is held, in which this appointment is debated by the cardinals of the aforesaid Congregation and its officials, but without the vote or participation of the consultors, though this privilege is always granted them by rescript.

9) If in this meeting the cardinals favor the appointment of the aforesaid commission, a decree to that effect is promulgated, and the pope signs it, but, according to custom, with his baptismal name, not with that of his pontificate. Thenceforward the servant of God is judicially given the title of "Venerable."

10) A petition is then presented, asking remissorial letters for bishops in partibus (outside of Rome), authorizing them to set on foot, by Apostolic authority, the inquiry (processus) with regard to the fame of sanctity and miracles in general. This permission is granted by rescript, and such remissorial letters are prepared and sent to the bishops by the postulator-general. In case the eye-witnesses are of advanced age, other remissorial letters are usually granted for the purpose of opening a process known as "inchoative," concerning the particular virtues and miracles of the person in question. This is done in order that the proofs may not be lost, and such inchoative process precedes that upon the miracles and virtues in general.

11) While the Apostolic process concerning the reputation of sanctity is under way outside of Rome, documents are being prepared by the procurator of the cause for the discussion de non cultu, absence of cultus, and at the appointed time an ordinary meeting is held in which the matter is investigated; if it be found that the decree of Urban VIII has been complied with, another decree provides that further steps may be taken.

12) When the inquiry concerning the reputation of sanctity has arrived in Rome, it is opened, translated into Italian, summarized and declared valid. The documents super fama in general are prepared by the advocate, and at the proper time, in an ordinary meeting of the cardinals of the Congregation of Rites, the question is discussed whether there is evidence of a general reputation for sanctity and miracles of this servant of God. If the answer is favorable, a decree embodying this result is published.

13) New remissorial letters are then sent to the bishops in partibus for Apostolic processes with regard to the reputation for sanctity and miracles in particular. These processes must be finished within eighteen months, and when they are received in Rome, are opened by the cardinal prefect and, by virtue of an equal number of rescripts, translated into Italian, and their summary authenticated by the chancellor of the Congregation of Rites.

14) The advocate of the cause next prepares the documents (positio) which have reference to the discussion of the validity of all the preceding processes, informative and Apostolic.

15) This discussion is held in the meeting called Congregatio Rotalis, from the fact that it is only judges of the Rota who vote. If the difficulties of the Promotor of the Faith are satisfactorily answered, the decree establishing the validity of the inquiries or processes is published.

16) Meanwhile all necessary preparation is made for the discussion of the question (dubium): Is there evidence that the venerable servant of God practiced virtues, both theological and cardinal, and in a heroic degree? In the causes of confessors this step is of primary importance. The point is discussed in three meetings or congregations, called, respectively, ante-preparatory, preparatory, and general. The first of these is held in the palace of the cardinal relator of the cause, and in it only consultors of the Congregation of Sacred Rites are allowed to vote; the second takes place in the Vatican, and again only the afore-said consultors vote, though on this occasion, in presence of the cardinals of the Congregation of Rites, and with their chairman or prefect, presiding; the third is also held in the Vatican, and at it the pope presides, and both cardinals and consultors vote. For each of these congregations the advocate of the cause prepares and prints official reports, called, respectively, report, new report, final report, concerning the virtues, etc. (positio, positio nova, positio novissima, super virtutibus). In each case, before proceeding to the subsequent meeting, a majority of the consultors must decide that the difficulties of the Promotor of the Faith have been satisfactorily solved.

17) When the Congregation of Rites in the above described general meeting has decided favorably, the pope is asked to sign the solemn decree which asserts that there exists evidence of the heroic virtues of the servant of God. This decree is not published until after the pope, having commended the matter to God in prayer, gives his final consent and confirms by his supreme sentence the decision of the Congregation.

18) The miracles now remain to be proved, of which two of the first class are required in case the practice of virtues in a heroic degree has been proved, in both ordinary and Apostolic inquiries or processes, by eyewitnesses,—three, if the eyewitnesses were found only in the ordinary processes; four, if the virtues were proved only by hearsay evidence. If the miracles have been sufficiently proved in the Apostolic processes, already declared valid, steps are taken at once to prepare the documents with regard to miracles. If in the Apostolic processes only general mention has been made of the miracles, new Apostolic processes must be opened and conducted after the manner already described for proving the practice of virtues in an heroic degree.

19) The discussion of the particular miracles proceeds in exactly the same way and order as that of the virtues. If the decisions are favorable, the general meeting of the Congregation is followed by a decree, confirmed by the Pope, in which it is announced that there is proof of miracles. It must be noted here that in the positio for the ante-preparatory congregation there are required, and are printed, opinions of two physicians, one of whom has been chosen by the postulator, the other by the Congregation of Rites. Of the three reports above mentioned, and which are now also required, the first is prepared in the usual way; the second consists of an exposition of the heroic virtues of the servant of God, an information, and a reply to later observations of the Promotor of the Faith; the last consists only of an answer to his final observations.

20) When the miracles have been proved, another meeting of the Congregation of Rites is held, in which it is debated once, and only once, whether or not, given the approbation of the virtues and miracles, it is safe to proceed with the solemnities of beatification. If a majority of the consultors vote favorably, a decree to this effect is issued by the Pope, and at the time appointed by him the solemn beatification of the servant of God takes place in the Vatican basilica, on which occasion a pontifical Brief is issued permitting the public cultus of the beatified person, now known as "Blessed."

B) The Beatification of Martyrs

1) The causes of martyrs are conducted in the same way as those of confessors as far as the informative processes and those de non cultu and ad introductionem causae are concerned. But when once the commission of introduction has been appointed, they advance much more rapidly.

2) No remissorial letters are granted for Apostolic processes concerning the general reputation for martyrdom and miracles; the letters sent call for an immediate investigation into the fact of martyrdom, its motive, and the particular miracles alleged. There is no discussion of the general reputation for martyrdom or miracles.

3) The miracles are not discussed, as formerly, in separate meetings, but in the same meeting that deals with the fact and the motive of martyrdom.

4) The miracles required are not those of the first class; those of the second class suffice, nor is their number determined. On some occasions the decision as to miracles has been entirely dispensed with.

5) The discussion as to martyrdom and miracles, formerly held in three meetings or congregations, is now usually conducted, through a dispensation to be had in each instance from the Sovereign Pontiff, in a single congregation, known as particularis, or special. It consists of six or seven cardinals of the Congregation of Rites and four or five prelates especially deputed by the pope. There is but one positio, prepared in the usual way; if there be an affirmative majority, a decree is issued concerning the proof of martyrdom, the cause of martyrdom and the miracles.

6) The final stage is a discussion of the security (super tuto) with which advance to beatification can be made, as in the case of confessors; the solemn beatification then follows.

Those proposed as coming under the definition of cases excepted by Urban VIII are treated in another way. In such cases it must be proved that an immemorial public veneration (at least 100 years before the promulgation, in 1640, of the decrees of Urban VIII) has been paid to the servant of God, whether martyr or confessor. Such a cause is proposed under the title of "confirmation of cult"; it is dealt with in an ordinary meeting of the Congregation of Rites. When the difficulties of the Promotor of the Faith have been satisfied, a pontifical decree confirming the cultus is promulgated. Beatification of this kind is called equivalent or virtual.

C) The Canonization of Confessors or Martyrs

The canonization of confessors or martyrs may be taken up as soon as two miracles are reported to have been wrought at their intercession, after the pontifical permission of public veneration, as described above. At this stage it is only required that the two miracles wrought after the permission awarding a public cultus be discussed in three meetings of the congregation. The discussion proceeds in the ordinary way; if the miracles are confirmed, another meeting super tuto is held. The pope then issues a bull of canonization, in which he not only permits, but commands, the public cult or veneration of the saint.

It may be easily conjectured that considerable time must elapse before any cause of beatification or canonization can be conducted, from the first steps of the information, inquiry or process, to the issuing of the decree super tuto. This is especially true at present, when a great number of causes, new and old, are proposed for discussion before the Congregation of Rites. In the archives of the S. Congregation of Rites I have seen a large library of documents referring to so-called "sleeping" causes, i. e., causes which for some reason were interrupted and not taken up again.

A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF THE SAINTS

* Aaron, the "Illustrious" or "of the Nuts," of Sarug in Osrhoene (Mesopotamia), a disciple of S. Eugene (Augin); he built two monasteries near Melitene in Armenia, in the 4th cent. F. in the Jacobite Church on Pentecost Monday; Rb. Sl.: 3 Feb., 22 Oct. and 23 May. Rb. Sl. 184, 166.

* Aaron, C., a Coptic (Monophysite) saint. The apocryphal legend says of him: "When he was sick, he made roasted pigeons fly into his mouth." F. 16 May. Cal. Copt.

Aaron, Hermit, b. of British parents in Armorican Domnonia; he was superior of a colony of hermits in the island of Cesambre, now St. Malo, Brittany. He lived there, when St. Malo arrived from Wales (in 552). F. 22 June. Lob. I 317.

Aaron, Highpriest of the Old Law, great-grandson of Levi, brother of Moses and Marjam. At the time of the exodus from Egypt he was 83 years of age. He was the head of the Kaathite Levites, the mouth of Moses (Exodus, IV, 16) and Prophet before the Pharaoh (VII, 1). In spite of having sinned by making the golden calf (Ex. XXIV, 9, 10) and of his arrogance against Moses at Hasebroth (Num. XII), after the revolt of Kore, he was ratified by God as Highpriest, his staff in the tent of the Covenant bringing forth leaves, flowers and fruit (Num. XVII, 1). Like Moses he never entered the Land of Promise, but died on Mount Hor at the age of 123 years, in the fifth month of the fortieth year of the migration, 1452 B. C. His tomb is shown on Mt. Harun. He is a type of Christ, the High-Priest of the New Dispensation. F. 1 July. Rom. Mart. At Jerusalem (Latin) simpl. In the Greek Church 1 Sept. In the Maronite Church 4 Sept. with Moses. He is commemorated daily in the Greek Mass.—C. E.—Buch. W. W.

Aaron, M., venerated in the Coptic Church, 19 Oct. Copt. Cal.

Aaron (B.), Bp. of Auxerre, France, c.

800. His cult is not approved, but his relics are venerated in the church of Saint-Germain, Auxerre. F. 28 Sept. P. B.

* Aba (Mar Abba), Katholikos (Metropolitan) of the Nestorian Church at Seleucia-Ctesiphon on the river Tigris, 540-552. He was a native of Hala in Mesopotamia and a convert from Zoroastrianism; he belonged to the school of Nisibis, founded by the Nestorian Barsauma. S. Aba restored the discipline of his Church and put down abuses, notably that of incest. He died in consequence of torture and exposure which he suffered for three years during the persecution of Chosroes, King of Persia. He is highly venerated by the Nestorians. F. on the 7th Friday after Epiphany and 23 Feb. Pers. 188—Fort. 82—Nest. II 154.—Wr. 116.

Aba, Priest, M., at Kaskhar; v. S. Abdas 16 May.

Abachum, M., at Rome, son of Ss. Maris and Martha. 19 Jan.

Abadios, M., b. at Bilgai in Egypt; he was a native soldier and confessed Christ under Diocletian at Khalakkhis, being thrown from a rock. F. 20 Jan. Arab-Jac.

Abadir and his sister Iraja (Herais), Mm. They were children of the sister of St. Basilides (the "Father of Kings"). According to the untrustworthy Coptic legend they fled from Antioch to Alexandria, but were arrested there, brought to Antinoe and beheaded with 3685 (?) companions. At the same time with them were martyred: Cluthus, the priest-physician of Antinoe, Apa Paphnutius of Tentyra, Apa Isaac of Tiphre, Apa Shamul of Taraphia, Apa Simon of Tapcho, Sissinius of Tantatho, Theodore of Chotep, Moses of Psammaniu, Philotheus of Pendje, Macarius of Fayum, Maximus of Vuchim, Macroni of Thoni, Senuthius of Buasti, Simeon of Thou, Ptolemaeus, son of the Eparch, and Thomas of Tanphot, all priests. Eg. III. Abadir and Iraja had a church at Osjut in Egypt. Their story is spurious. F. 25 Sept. in the Coptic Church. Cal. Copt.—Syn. 47.

Abadiu, M., Bp. of Antinoe in Egypt; he was killed by the Arians. F. 26 Dec. Eg. 98.

Abai, M., in Persia, under Shapur II. F. 1 Oct. in the Syrian Church.—Nill. I, 460.

Abaidas, C., a disciple of S. Acirianus, venerated in Abyssinia. 31 Oct. Cal. Copt.

Abahor = S. Hor (Apa Hor).

Abakerazum = S. Kirdjun. He was a converted robber who died as a martyr at Alexandria and was buried at Banuar. F. 19 July. Eg. 108.

Abakuh (Apa Kauh), M., of Bamujeh in Fayum, Egypt. He was a zealous Christian. F. 23 Jan.—Arab.-Jac.—Syn. 268. v. S. Chao.

Abamun (Apa Pamun), M., of Maryut in Egypt, at Alexandria. Eg. 108.

Abashadi = S. Psote.

Abassad, Bp., M.; after many tortures he was beheaded by command of Arrhianus under Diocletian. F. 23 Dec. Syn. 201.

Abban (Ewin), Abbot of New Ross (Rossmic-Trecin), County Wexford, Ireland. F. 16 March. He has been confounded with S. Evin of Monasterevan, County Kildare. C. E. I 7.

Abraham, (Father of many), patriarch, the progenitor of the Hebrew nation, son of Thares, younger brother to Aran, whose daughter Sarah he married. Upon God's command he, with his whole family, left his home Ur in Chaldea; migrated first to Haran, where his father died; then to Canaan, the land of divine promise. After his return from Egypt, whither a famine had driven him, he left to his cousin Lot the selection of their respective grazing grounds, saved him from the hands of hostile kings and was saluted by Melchisedech, king of Salem. From then on God began to fulfil His promises and confirmed them by a solemn covenant with Abraham: He promised him a son from the sterile Sarah and instituted circumcision as an outward sign of the covenant. Then followed the destruction of Sodom, the birth of Isaac, the dismissal of Agar with Ismael, the treaty with Abimelech, king of Gerasa. Abraham's faith was tested by God's command to sacrifice Isaac and rewarded by new promises. Abraham died at the age of 175 years and was buried at the side of Sarah at Mambré in Hebron,

He is the ancestor of the Hebrews (Jews), the Edomites and several Arabian tribes. Cf. Gen. XI-XXV. Achatius (Agathius), the Hekatontarch (centurio) in the cohort of the Martesians, M., a Cappadocian, centurion in the imperial army. He suffered first at Perinthus in Thrace; from there he was conducted to Byzantium and beheaded with the priest Maximus, the deacon Anthes and 75 comp. (their names v. Chevalier 1, 17) under Maximian in 306. Besides S. Modius S. Achatius is the only ancient martyr of Byzantium. His acts however are not reliable. Three churches were dedicated to him at Constantinople, one built by Emperor Constantine. His body was in Staurion, between the two bridges to Galata. He had no companions. Maximus and the 76 companions belong somewhere else. His feast was kept at Constantinople on 8 May, at Nicomedia on 10 May. Achatius = a Greek M. 2 June. Mrt. MGr.

Achatius, and 10,000 comp., Mm., apocryphal Roman soldiers who according to their fictitious acts, in consequence of the apparition of an angel, were converted during a campaign against the rebellious Syrian tribes of the Godarenes and Euphratesians and after a splendid victory, retired to Mt. Ararat in Armenia, for a contemplative life. After vain attempts by Emp. Hadrian and later on by Antoninus Pius to compel them to return to military service and pagan sacrifice, they, after long tortures and many fantastical miracles were crucified on Mt. Ararat in Armenia.—These martyrs were unknown before 1371; their story is a western romance, invented in the 14th cent. and written down by Peter de Natalibus. These saints never existed and, up to this day, are unknown to the entire Orient, including Armenia. Baronius "with unpardonable want of caution" inserted them into the Roman Mart. Their feast towards the end of the Middle Ages is found in nearly all the calendars and S. Achatius was elected one of the 14 Helpers in need. Adalbert (Voitech), M., Bp. of Prague and of Gnesen, Apostle of the Slavs, O. S. B. B. of the Bohemian princess of Slavink and educated at the cathedral school of Magdeburg, where he assumed the name of Archbishop Adalbert. A.D. 982 he was elected bishop of Prague and consecrated 983 by Wiligis of Mainz. With courage and zeal he tried to lead his people from the old pagan superstitions to the Christian faith. Having failed, he, in 988, retired to Rome, to the monast. of S. Alessio. In 922 John XV sent him back to Prague, where he founded Břevnov monastery. Since the Bohemians refused to submit, he left the country again, preached the gospel in Hungary, and returned to Rome to report to the Sovereign Pontiff. In the meantime nearly his entire family had been exterminated by the rival family Wroshowetz (25 Sept. 995); therefore Adalbert, instead of returning to Bohemia, went to the court of duke Boleslav Chabry of Poland, who appointed him Archbishop of Gnesen, and under this protection he undertook the evangelization of the pagan Prussians, but was killed by them, 23 Apr. 997, near Tenkitten, on the Fresh Haff. His body was redeemed by Boleslav and buried at Gnesen; in 1039 it was brought to Prague, where his tomb was opened, 15 March 1880. The Prussians (Ermeland, Gnesen, Kulm) keep his feast dp. 1 cl. oct. 23 Apr. in Silesia, Bohemia, Moravia and Hungary d. maj. The transl. of his relics is celebrated in Bohemia 25 Aug., in Poland 20 Oct., in Hungary 6 Nov. He is thought to be the author of the Polish war-song "Boga Rodzica." L. S.—W. W.—C. E.—Biogr.

Adalbert, Bp. of Magdeburg, probably a native of Lorraine, a Benedictine monk at Treves; when S. Olga, queen of Russia, asked for Christian missionaries he was sent by Emp. Otto to preach the gospel in Russia in 961; being attacked on the way and having barely escaped with his life, he returned and became abbot of Weissenburg, dioc. of Spire. In 968 he was elected Archbp. of Magdeburg and Metropolitan of the Slavs, among whom he established the sees of Naumburg, Meissen, Merseburg, Brandenburg, Havelburg and Posen. Adam, the first man and father of all mankind. His creation is related Gen. I, 26, 27, and again II, 7; the opinion that the body of Adam was not formed directly from the dust, but that it was the body of a highly developed animal, is precluded by the text of Holy Writ. That Adam was an image of God by supernatural privilege is indicated by his intimate intercourse with God, his exemption from concupiscence and his immortality. His wisdom is attested by Gen. I, 19, 20, and Eccl. XVII, 5, 6. He was to cultivate Paradise, by faithful service to God, preserve his supernatural gifts and transmit them to his offspring; wherefore the commandment, Gen. II, 16, 17. The transgression was followed by the loss of supernatural grace and of the privileges connected with it; but simultaneously with the ejection from Paradise and the sentence of sin and death over mankind was given the promise of redemption. By penance Adam obtained pardon, but the Latin Church has never given him the honors of a saint. Ado, Archbp. of Vienne, O. S. B.; b. c. 800 near Sens (Gatinois) of rich and noble parents; became monk at Ferrières and followed abbot Marquard to Pruem in the Eifel, where he taught the sacred sciences; after Marquard's death he was turned out of Pruem and spent five years in Italy (Rome and Ravenna). Returning to France he discovered at Ravenna an alleged Roman Martyrology and other material from which he compiled his famous Martyrology, which he finished at S. Romain in 858. Ado's Martyrology has largely influenced the compilers of later revisions of the Roman Martyrology itself, and full account must therefore, in the study of the latter, be taken of the shortcomings of Ado's work. (Quentin, 465-681) A. 860 elected Archbishop of Vienne, he held several synods with the clergy and laity of his diocese and province. On this subject he corresponded with Popes Nicholas and Adrian I; he also wrote the lives of several Merovingian saints and a chronicle (de sex aetatibus mundi). Aegydius (Giles), Abb., C., one of the 14 Helpers in Need (the only confessor); said to have been born in Greece (Athens); he passed over to Gaul, where he established himself first in a wilderness near the mouth of the Rhone and later on by the River Gard, hiding himself at last in a dense forest near Nîmes; there he was found by King Flavius (Wamba) of the Visigoths and induced to found a monastery, where now stands the city of S. Gilles. His "Acts" are of no value and full of anachronisms, connecting S. Caesarius of Arles (542), a Flavius (?), king of the Visigoths (680) and Charles Martel (741). It was probably King Childebert who found the old hermit in the forest near the mouth of the Rhone and made him consent to the erection of a monastery (west of Arles) upon the site of his grotto. He died c. 750. In the 11th cent. his tomb at S. Gilles was one of the three great shrines of pilgrimages in the western Church (Rome, Compostela, S. Gilles). His relics were elevated 15 June 925; during the Calvinistic disturbances (1562) they were dispersed and partly brought to S. Sernin, Toulouse; his tomb and some relics were rediscovered at S. Gilles, 22 Oct., 1865. He is patron of many churches all over Europe. F. 1 Sept. simpl. in the Latin Church, instituted by Urban IV; dp. at Athens and Nîmes. Aengus, the "Culdee," Bp., C., an Irish hagiographer; he was a descendant of King Coelbach of Ireland; educated at S. Finian's school at Clonenagh, he at first lived in the solitude of Dysert-beagh, then at Dysert-Enos, practicing remarkable austerities; after some years he retired as a laybrother to the monastery of Tallagh, concealing his identity; being discovered, he, with the abbot S. Maelruan, composed the Martyrology of Tallagh, about 790. Then he returned to Dysert-beagh, after S. Maelruan's death was elected bishop and abbot of Clonenagh, c. 805, and finished his famous Felire, a poetical work on all the saints of Ireland. He died at Dysert-beagh 11 March 824 and was buried at Clonenagh. F. 11 March. O'H., III, 294. Ins. 404.

Afomya = S. Euphemia V. M. 16 Sept.

Afra, M., according to the unreliable legend of Ss. Faustinus and Jovita, she was the wife of the praetor Julian of Brescia, was converted by the miracles wrought by those martyrs, baptized at Rome and beheaded at Brescia in 133. Her relics were elevated in her own church, 19 Sept. 1580. Her story is spurious. It was in her church at Brescia that S. Angela Merici founded the Ursuline Order and was herself buried. F. 24 May in Rom. Mart., dp. at Brescia. H. L.

Afra, M., at Spezzia; v. S. Antonius, 14 June.

Afra, M., at Augsburg under Diocletian. Her existence, her martyrdom and her ancient veneration are firmly established; the story, however, that she was a prostitute from Cyprus, converted by S. Narcissus of Gerona, is a legend of Carolingian times (conversion of S. Afra), which was added to the original, perhaps genuine acts of S. Afra. Documents older than the 6th cent. call her "virgin." Perhaps she was the daughter of some Roman officer and accompanied her father from Egypt (or Cyprus) to Augsburg, not a camp-follower of bad repute. According to the legend S. Narcissus ordained her uncle Dionysius priest (or Bp.) Afra herself was burnt at the stake on an island of the river Lech. When her mother Hilaria and her servants Eumonia and Euprepia buried her body, they were surprised by soldiers and slain in the sepulchral chapel. But all these names are uncertain; that of Afra alone may be genuine. The relics of S. Afra were found a. 955 by S. Ulric, and are now buried in the church of Ss. Ulric and Afra. She is the patron of penitents and was a very popular saint towards the end of the Middle Ages; she is still highly venerated all over the south of Germany. F. 5 Aug. in Rom. Mart.; at Munich and Dresden, 9 Aug. dp.; at Augsburg 11 Aug. dp. maj. Her conversion 26 Oct. sem. D. G., I, 118.—Ruin., 483.—L. S.—H. L.—Dand., II, 199.—H. D.—J. F.

Agape, Chionia and Irene, Vv., Mm, sisters, living, perhaps, near Aquileja; because they concealed sacred books in their house, they were arrested under Diocletian and brought to Thessalonica in Macedonia (not Salona in Dalmatia). Agape and Chionia were burnt at the stake, Irene sent to a brothel, then also burnt alive a few days after her sisters, a. 304. Their Latin "acts" are partly spurious; the Greek original was edited from genuine sources. Their basilica was outside the gates of Saloniki (Thessalonica). These virgins have no connection with Dalmatia; also their relations to Aquileja are doubtful. In Rom. Mart. Ss. Agape and Chionia 3 Apr., S. Irene 5 Apr.; all three formerly at Aquileja 5 Apr.; at Zara 5 Apr. dp. maj. Full office in Greek Ch. 16 Apr. Leg. St. 68—Passions 141—Ruins, 424.—Dand. II 128.

Agapitus, M., subdeacon; he was one of the companions of S. Cyriacus. His feast is celebrated at S. Maria in Via Lata, Rome, 7 Aug. dp. maj.

Agapitus, M., at Palestrina, Italy. The legend states that he was a youth of 15 years, of noble birth. After the usual torture the brave boy was thrown to the wild beasts in the amphitheatre, but the fierce animals refused to do him any harm. The sight of the miracle astounded the spectators and was followed by the conversion to Christianity of not a few amongst them, e. g., Anastasius, a tribune of the army. The judge cut matters short by ordering Agapitus to be forthwith beheaded (in 274). The story of his horrible and manifold tortures is probably an amplification of an older and simpler account. His Passion has served as pattern for many others, e. g., that of S. Venantius of Camerino. His body is in his own church at Palestrina; his head is at Besançon, since 445. F. 18 Aug. Rom. Agatha, V., M., the most highly venerated virgin of Christian antiquity. B. of a noble family at Palermo or at Catania in Sicily, she suffered martyrdom at Catania, probably under Decius, a. 251. Historical certitude is attached merely to the fact of her martyrdom and of her public veneration. Neither her Greek nor her Latin acts can lay any claim to historical credibility; in their Latin form they are not older than the 6th cent. According to them Agatha was persecuted by the senator Quintianus with avowals of love. Spurned by the pious virgin, he committed her to the charge of a prostitute; then, after the customary torture, he ordered her breasts to be cut off. But S. Agatha was miraculously cured in a vision by S. Peter; she died in prison. Her relics were brought to Constantinople, a. 1040, but a. 1126 restored to Catania. Throughout the region around Mt. Etna she is invoked against the eruptions of the volcano. The miracles by which her intercession has preserved Catania in successive eruptions are well authenticated. Elsewhere she is invoked against fire, earthquakes, thunderstorms, and famine; she is also patroness of wet-nurses, bell founders, and jewellers. Her church at Rome, the national church of the Arian Goths, after 549, was dedicated to her by S. Gregory I; it now belongs to the Irish College. Her feast is dp. 5 Feb. in the Latin Church and has the full office of the day in the Greek Church. At Catania she is Princ. Patr. dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Palermo 17 Aug. transl. of her arm (a. 1126) at Catania 18 Aug. tr. rel. from Constantinople to sem. and formerly the F. of her Patronage 17 June dp. maj. (pestilence of 1506); at Prosedi, dioc. of Ferentino Patr. last Sunday in May, the same F. at Gallipoli 5th Sunday after Easter.—Modern hagiographers contend that she has inherited part of her veneration from the "good Mother Kybele" of the pagan Sicilians. She is mentioned in the Roman Canon of the Mass. Patr.—L. S.—H. L.—W. W.—C. E.—Rams.—Dict.—J. F.

Agatha, Hildegardis, Matron, wife of the palatine Paul of Carinthia, accused by her husband of infidelity, she was thrown from the tower of his castle, but escaped unhurt. D. 1024. Agilulf, M., Bp., of Cologne. The events of his life are uncertain. The offspring of a noble family, he was elected abbot of Stavelot and Malmédy and Archbishop of Cologne. D. 711. He seems to have been opposed to the organization of the Church of Germany, as planned by S. Boniface. When sent by Charles Martel as ambassador to some enemies, he was killed, 31 March, c. 717, on the river Amblef in Luxemburg. His death is attributed to the revenge of Charles Martel, whom Agilulf sought to exclude from the succession to the throne; this, however, may be a calumny. He was buried at Malmédy, but his body was transferred to Cologne, to the church of Our Lady of the Steps, a. 1075. F. 9 July (tr. rel. to Cologne) Rom. Mart., dp. at Cologne. L. S.—H. L.—H. D.

Agilus (Ayeul), first abbot of Rebais, dioc. of Meaux, since 636; he was a nobleman of the Frankish court, but became a monk at Luxeuil and disciple of S. Columban; after the departure of S. Columban, he, with S. Eustasius, preached the gospel in Germany, west of the Vosges and the Jura. He was a son of Agnoald, prime minister to King Childebert II. D. 30 Aug. c. 650. F. 26 Aug. at Besançon, simpl.; at Meaux 4 Sept. dp. P. B.—Mg.

Agilus, C., viscount of Orléans under King Gontran; when he pursued a fugitive servant, he fell from his horse and was dangerously hurt; restored to health at the tomb of S. Maximin the Elder, he commenced to lead an austere ascetical life and made a pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem. D. 593

Agnellus, Archbp. of Ravenna, C., b. at Ravenna; he first followed the military career; after his wife's death he took Holy Orders and was appointed parish priest of S. Agatha's, Ravenna, by S. Ecclesius; 24 June 566 he was elected Archbp. after the death of Marcellianus; during his administration Emp. Justinian destroyed the realm of the Ostrogoths and gave their possessions to the Church; wherefore S. Agnellus purified a number of Arian churches, also the Arian Cathedral built by Theodoric (S. Martino in cielo d'oro). D. 1 Aug. 579 and was buried at S. Agatha's; his relics were found in 1607. F. 14 Aug. dp. at Ravenna. Off. pr. H. L.

Agnellus, Abb., b. at Naples; when only 15 years old he began to lead a solitary life in a cave; after the death of his parents he built a hospital at Naples from his inherited estate; to escape celebrity he again fled to the mountains, but later on returned to his hospice and was elected abbot of S. Gaudioso near Naples. As to the rule followed in his monastery, some think it to have been that of S. Basil, others that S. Benedict. D. 695. He was the city's patron during the Saracen invasions. When the Saracens (in 674) besieged the city of Naples, S. Agnellus raised the standard of the Cross and, at the head of the Neapolitan troops, put the besiegers to flight. His relics are partly at Naples in his own church, partly in the cathedral of Lucca. F. 14 Dec. dp. by the Basilians and at Lucca dp.; Rom. Mart. H. L.—Off. pr.—Rams.

Agnellus of Pisa, (B.) C., O. F. M., founder of the English Franciscan province; he was a native of Pisa (1194) and received the habit from St. Francis himself; he founded a monastery and a theological school at Paris and introduced the Seraphic Order in England, where he established the school of Oxford; he was ordained priest at Canterbury. D. at Oxford, 13 March 1236; his relics were destroyed during the reign of Henry VIII. Cult approved 4 Sept. 1892. F. 13 March. O. F. M.—Seeb. 211.

Agnes, a Greek M.; v. S. Thyrsus, 20 Jan.

Agnes (Clodia), V., M., the most celebrated V. M. of Rome. She was b. at Rome of rich and noble parents; at the age of 12 years she suffered martyrdom under Valerian, c. 258 (?). Very early she attained great celebrity and veneration in the entire Church, shown by the many Acts which go back to S. Ambrose (De Virg. 1, 2), Damasus (inscription) and Prudentius (hymn). But the Acts, in the form handed down to us, are certainly spurious. Not even the time of her death can be determined with any degree of certainty. Evidently she did not suffer under Diocletian (304), but rather in a persecution subsequent to that of Decius (251), or still earlier. It is also uncertain whether she died through fire or the sword; both versions are known in the 4th cent. The earliest sources are the words of S. Ambrose, the verse of Pope Damasus, and the poem of Prudentius. The first two agree that Agnes was aged twelve at the time of her martyrdom; but there agreement ceases. S. Ambrose says that she was executed with the sword, also that she had refused a suitor, having been sought in marriage. Pope Damasus says that she voluntarily delivered herself up to judgment, that she was stripped but covered by her long flowing hair, and that she suffered death by fire. Prudentius declares that before her death she was exposed in a brothel. Neither he nor Damasus knew anything about her rejection of marriage. The three accounts are irreconcilable, and obviously are based on floating traditions that varied greatly. Her parents buried her body near one of their country houses on the Via Nomentana, in a cubiculum which formed the center of one of the most celebrated Roman coemeteria. The church of S. Agnes over her tomb was built during the reign of Constantine and remodeled by Pope Honorius (d. 638). There every year are blessed the lambs, from the wool of which the pallia are made. Her body is in this church, her head in the Sancta Sanctorum. She is the patron of young girls, also of gardeners. On the eve of her day many kinds of divination are practiced in England by virgins to discover their future husbands, (Bra. I 32.). The Latin Church celebrates her feast 21 Jan. dp.; the memory on 28 Jan. is the remnant of an ancient octave. Her name is in the Canon of the Roman Mass. The Greeks have her feast with a full office 14 Jan. and 5 July the comm. of her translation under Marcianus. The Trinitarians keep the F. of her Apparition to Constantia 28 Jan. (anniv. of the founding of their order) dp. 1 cl. oct. Some of her relics were transferred to Utrecht, where formerly their invention (a. 964, after the Danish wars) was kept 31 March and the 2nd Transl. (1421) 2 Sept. dp. In the Church of S. Eustace, Paris, tr. rel. 4th Sunday after Easter. Unt. Rom. 149.—Ruin. 486.—L. S.—W. W.—C. E.—R. Sett. 541.—J. F.—Biog.

Agnes of Montepulciano, V., O. P., b. 1268 at Gracciano, dioc. of Montepulciano, of the counts of Segni. At the age of nine years she joined the sisterhood "del sacco," but six years later was elected first abbess of the Dominican convent of Proceno; later on she accepted possession of a convent at Montepulciano, to which she gave the rule of S. Dominic and which she governed for many years. God glorified her by mystical gifts and many miracles. D. at Montepulciano 20 Apr. 1317. Her cult was approved by Clement VIII.; she was canonized in 1726 by Benedict XIII. In 1435 her body was brought to the Dominican church of Orvieto. F. 20 Apr. Totum dp. oct. O. Agnes (B.) of Bohemia or of Prague, V., O. F. M., b. at Prague, 20 Jan. 1200, daughter of King Ottokar of Bohemia; educated by the Cistercian nuns of Trebnitz and the Premonstratensian nuns of Doxan, she dedicated her virginity to Christ and refused engagements to Emperor Frederic II and King Henry III of England. Given to works of penance and charity she founded, in 1232, the monastery O. F. M. of S. Jacob at Prague, in 1234 a hospital, in which the Order of the "Cruciates of the Red Star" (rule of S. Aug.) originated and in the same year the first cisalpine convent of Poor Clares, at Prague, in honor of the Saviour; there she took the veil 18 May 1236. S. Clare called her "half of my soul." D. at Prague 2 March 1282. F. 2 March dp. O. F. M., O. Cap. and O. Convent; also in Bohemia and Moravia. The Holy Cross Fathers of the Star venerate her as their patron (1 cl.). Seeb. 233—H. D.—F. Agoard and Agilbert, Mm.; they had come from the Rhine country, were instructed and baptized by Ss. Altinus and Eoaldus at Creteil near Paris and killed in a popular outbreak of the pagans against the Christians with innumerable companions, probably about 400, not in the first century. F. Rom. Mart. 24 June; at Paris dp. 27 June. P. B.—Mg.

Agobard (Aguebaud), Archbp. of Lyons, b. c. 769, probably in Spain. In 808 elected auxiliary of Archbp. Leidrad of Lyons and 814 his successor, he was the head of the party amongst the French clergy which fought for the indivisibility of the Empire and for the independence of the Church. Because he espoused the cause of Emperor Louis against his sons, he was exiled for two years; restored to his see, he retired to Saintes and died there 6 June 840. He left many writings against Adoptianism, about the inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jewish question, the veneration of images (which he opposed), etc. F. 6 June at Lyons dp. maj. P. Agricius, Bp. of Treves. Born probably in Gascony (not at Antioch); he is the first clearly authenticated Bp. of Treves; it is however an error to say that he was called to that see by S. Helen, the mother of Constantine. An untrustworthy local tradition 9th cent. states that he had been patriarch of Antioch; he is also believed to have brought the "Holy Coat" and the relics of S. Matthias to Treves. In 314 he took part in the synod of Arles, signing immediately after the presiding Bp. of Arles, since Treves was then the Capital of Belgica Prima, the chief city of Gaul and residence of Emperors. The schools of Treves became famous under S. Agricius. F. 13 Jan. Rom. Mart.; at Treves 13 Jan. in Breviary of 1515; now 19 Jan. dp. maj. H. L.—W. W.—H. D.

Agricius, metropolitan of Sens, elected in 455, to succeed S. Ambrosius; d. 13 June 487. His relics in 876 were brought from the church of S. Gervais to S. Pierre-le-Vif. F. 13 June dp. at Sens. Mg. P. B.

Agricius, regionary Bishop in the Rhone Valley (Vienne); at Vienne formerly his feast with that of S. Casturius was kept 14 Oct.; now at Lyons dp. maj. Aug. 11. P. B.

Agricola (Arigle), Bp. of Nevers; b. at Sainte-Reine (Alez) in Burgundy, intimate friend of Venantius Fortunatus; he was governor of the Nivernais when he was elected Bp. of Nevers to succeed S. Eolade. D. 26 Feb. 594; his relics in S. Stephen were dispersed in 1793. F. 26 Feb. dp. at Nevers. P. B.—Mg.

Agricola (Arègle, Agrèle), 7th bishop of Chalons-sur-Seine; b. of a senatorial Gallo-Roman family; he was elected bishop to succeed S. Silvester and was present at the synods of Orléans in 541 and 549, at Paris in 555 and at Lyons in 567. D. 580. St. Gregory of Tours enlarges upon the austerity of his private life. His relics were elevated in the church of S. Marcellus a. 878. F. 17 March Rom. Mart. L. S.—P. B.

Agricola, priest, probably a nephew of S. Remi of Reims; he went to Soissons after the death of S. Remi. D. about 532, was buried in the cemetery of S. Thecla; his relics were transferred to the Cathedral and in 1567 burnt by the Calvinists. F. at Soissons 20 Oct. simpl. P. B.

ALBANUS, M.; his relics are in the cathedral of Sora. F. 2 March dp. O.

ALBANUS, of Verulam, the protomartyr of Britain, during the persecution of Diocletian. He was a layman, converted by a Christian priest, whom he had sheltered in his house at Verulamium (S. Alban's, Herefordshire). Seeing the soldiers arrive to arrest the priest, he cast the latter's cloak (am- phibalus) over his head and shoulders and presented himself to the soldiers as the man whom they sought. He was scourged and beheaded on a hill near Verulam. Since the decrees of Diocletian were not carried into effect in Britain, the fact of the martyrdom of S. Alban has been doubted by some writers. It is first mentioned, c. 480, by Constantius in his Life of S. Germain of Auxerre. Though Constantius Chlorus may have discouraged persecution himself, it is by no means improbable that local persecutions may have broken out under severe and bigoted magistrates. That S. Alban's martyrdom, however, happened in the persecution of Diocletian rests only on the guess of the Briton Gildas. The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle dates it in 286. All that seems certain is that, within 125 years after the last persecution, a belief existed at Verulam that a martyr named Alban lay buried near that town. His acts are a forgery of William of S. Alban's. On the site of the martyrdom rose a small church, which still stood in the time of S. Bede, a. 793. Offa founded the stately abbey of S. Alban's. During the Danish invasions his body (also that of the priest "Amphibalus") was transferred to Ely; the relics shown later at S. Alban's were spurious; these were scattered during the reign of Henry VIII. The S. Alban enshrined at Cologne is a Roman saint. F. 22 June dp. maj. in all England. S. Alban is patron of the English College at Valladolid. Passions, 403.—L. S.—St.—Rams.—Angl.—Dict.

ALBANUS, Bp., M., and DOMINICUS, a hermit. Their bodies are venerated in the church of S. Martin at Burano near Venice. Nothing else is known of them. This Alban is not identical with S. Alban of Mayence. F. at Burano 21 June. H. L.

ALBANUS, M., Patron of the cathedral, dioc. of Namur; 21 June dp. 1 cl. oct.—22 Oct. Tr. S. Albani dp. maj. He is identical with S. Alban of Mayence; he is patron against the pestilence. H. L.

ALBANUS (Albinus), priest. M., at Mayence, Germany. According to the unreliable tradition of Mayence he was b. on the isle of Naxos; with Ss. Theonestus and Ursus he came to Milano, c. 385, from there to Aosta, where S. Ursus (1 Feb.) was martyred; then with Theonestus went on to Mayence, c. 404. There he was beheaded at the village of Hunnum, a. 406, when the city was destroyed by the Vandals (not by the Huns, who could not have come to Mayence before 451). His relics are in the Church of Mt. S. Alban's (Albansberg); he has often been confounded with S. Alban of Verulam. Cf. also S. Albinus. F. dp. at Mayence 21 June (formerly in many dioceses simpl.) Alcuin (Alchwin) (B.), priest, Abb., C., the most learned man of his time; b. at York, c. 735, educated in the cathedral school under Archbps. Egbert and Aelbert, who gave him the care of the cathedral library; he directed the school after 766; a. 781 he was sent to Rome by Archbp. Eanbald; on his journey home he became acquainted with Charlemagne at Parma, and left England permanently for France in 782, to become the prime minister (almoner) of the Emperor. He was the head of a circle of savants at Aix-la-Chapelle, friend and teacher of Charlemagne and his adviser in founding schools ("schoolmaster of his age"), to elevate the education of the people. In 796 he established the great school of Tours. He was an eminent theologian, grammarian, poet, philosopher, and astronomer. D. at Tours 19 May 804. His relics are in S. Martin's, Tours. Alda (Aude), V., disciple of Ste. Genevieve, whose virtues she imitated. 6th cent. The canonesses of Ste. Genevieve possessed her relics. In the dioc. of Meaux a church was dedicated to her. F. 18 Nov. simpl. at Meaux. P. B.—Mg.

Aldate (Eldad), Bp., M., son of Geraint, prince of Erging, Herefordshire; he was bishop of Caer Loew, i. e., Gloucester, after having been trained in the school of S. Iltyd; his brothers were Ss. Meven and Ustig. He was slaughtered by the victorious Saxons after the battle of Deorham in 577. Aldate's patriotism in stirring up his fellow-countrymen to resist the heathen invaders of the land, coupled with his holy life, gained for him local repute as a saint. There is some reason to believe that there were two saints of this name in England, in the 5th and 6th cent., but it is impossible to disentangle their legends. Churches are dedicated to him at Gloucester and Oxford. F. 4 Feb. L. S.—St.

Aldhelm, Bp., C., of Sherborne, O. S. B. He was born probably of the royal family of Wessex, studied at Malmesbury and at Canterbury (under S. Adrian); took the habit from S. Maïulf (Maeldubh), an Irish scholar, at Malmesbury, where he became teacher and abbot for 30 years. He brought his monastery to eminent prosperity, raising the standard of studies and erecting new buildings; he practiced the usual Celtic austerities. At the request of a synod held in Wessex, he wrote a letter to the Britons of Devon and Cornwall on the paschal question, by which many of them were induced to conform to the Roman usage. In 705 he was elected first bishop of Sherborne, Wessex. He is the first Englishman to cultivate classical learning with any success and the first of whom any writings are preserved. Among his literary works in prose and poetry are a pious treatise on Virginity, addressed to the Abbess Hildelith of Barking, and a poem "De Laudibus Virginum," in 300 verses. Alexander, C., Founder of the "Sleepless Monks" (Akimiti). He was of Asiatic origin and educated at Constantinople, where he entered the army and was advanced to the office of eparchus, but gave all he had to the poor and took a monk's tonsure in Syria. There, by a miracle, he converted the governor of Edessa, S. Rabulas, later on bishop of Edessa. In the desert he converted thirty robbers and changed their den into a monastery. Then he founded, on the river Euphrates, a very successful monastery, which he governed for twenty years. He went out, with his monks, to preach the gospel, first to Palmyra, then to Antioch; at both places he was driven away by force. Thence he went to Constantinople with 300 monks, Greeks, Romans and Syrians, and settled them at Gomon in Bithynia, on the Bosphorus, and divided them into six choirs, who should alternately sing the divine office, so that the praises of Christ might ascend ceaselessly, night and day. Thence his Order was called the Akimiti, or Sleepless Ones. But the civil powers interfered and broke up the monastery; when the persecution was over, the monks came together again and the sleepless vigil recommenced at Gomon. S. Alexander d. in Gomon c. 430. Alexander, C., Bp. of Jerusalem, disciple of Clement of Alexandria; he was elected bishop of Flavia (.) in Cappadocia, in 204 appointed coadjutor to S. Narcissus of Jerusalem, in 212 his successor. This was the first instance of an episcopal translation and coadjutorship and had to be ratified by the hierarchy of Palestine. Because he had taken part in the ordination of Origen and defended him (he had permitted Origen, when still a layman, to speak in the churches), he got into conflict with Bishop Demetrius of Alexandria. When the persecution broke out, under Decius, he was arrested and sentenced to death, but the beasts in the public theatre refused to injure him; he died in prison at Caesarea, a. 251. Alexander I, M., Pope (110–116), successor to S. Evaristus; probably a Roman by birth. To him is attributed the institution of the ancient custom of mixing water and wine at Mass and of blessing Holy Water for the faithful. He is said to have been beheaded with the priest Eventius and the deacon Theodulus at the Via Nomentana, where his empty tomb was found in 1855. Ss. Alexander and Eventius were buried in one tomb, S. Theodulus near by. Duchesne and other archeologists deny that the Pope Alexander and the martyr Alexander of the Via Nomentana are identical. They are local, not Roman martyrs; their basilica was the cathedral of the united dioceses of Ficulnea-Numentum (Mentana). Under Paschalis I the relics were brought to Rome (S. Prassede, S. Lorenzo in Lucina and S. Sabina); the basilica fell into ruins, but was rediscovered in 1855. Some relics of Pope Alexander were transferred to Freising, a. 834. Alexius and Apollo, Bps. of unknown sees in Bithynia. F. 10 June. MGR.

Alexius, C., at Rome, Patron of the Alexian Brothers. According to the Roman legend he was the son of a Roman patrician. He left his wife at Rome the night after the marriage ceremony and went abroad in a pilgrim's garb; he lived 17 years at Edessa in voluntary poverty and 17 years under the staircase (?) of the atrium of his father's palace at Rome, concealing his identity. After his death a written paper was found in his possession, giving particulars of his life and of the motives which had induced him to act as he had done. Pope Innocent I and the Emperor Honorius are said to have been present at his obsequies. In this form the legend is related first in the canon of his office by S. Joseph the Hymnographer (d. 883). When, in 972, Pope Benedict VII transferred the almost abandoned church of S. Boniface to the exiled Metropolitan Sergius of Damascus and to a colony of Oriental monks, the latter added the name of "Alexius" as Titular of church and monastery to that of S. Boniface. It appears for the first time in a public document in 987. The original Syrian version of the story (5th cent.) relates that the saint lived and died at Edessa during the episcopate of S. Rabula (412-435). The Syrian writer simply calls him "Man of God," without giving any name. The Greeks and Syrians still call him "Man of God." The name "Alexius" seems to have originated in Greece. Later on his legend was confounded with that of S. John Calybity; it originated, however, in Syria and from there was transplanted to Rome, where it was localized. During the Middle Ages it was very popular and spread far abroad. His alleged relics, with those of S. Boniface, were found in 1217. S. Alexius, with S. Alphonsus, S. Cajetan, and S. Margaret Mary is minor patron of the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary. F. in the Syrian (now the Syrians call him "Mar Risca") and Greek Churches 17 March, full office of the day; in the Latin Ch. 17 July sem.; in the Armenian Menol. 18 July.—He is patron of beggars, pilgrims and belt-makers. All Saints (Feast of). At the anniversary of the Dedication of Our Lady of Martyrs (Pantheon) at Rome, the pilgrims and Romans (May 13, 609) celebrated the memory of All the Martyrs and All the Saints. Gregory III (d. 741) dedicated a chapel in the Vatican basilica in honor of All Saints. Gregory IV changed the date from May 13 to Nov. 1 and asked Emperor Louis the Pious to introduce the feast in the Empire, in 835. Sixtus IV (d. 1484) added the octave. The Catholic Copts, Syrians, and Armenians adopted the feast of Nov. 1 from the Latins. The Greeks and the other churches who follow the Greek rite, celebrate the feast of All Saints on the first Sunday after Pentecost. This feast was known at Antioch as a feast of the Martyrs at the time of S. John Chrysostom (d. 407). At Edessa the Syrians kept this feast on the first Sunday after S. Thomas (3 July), the Chaldaeans, as early as 411, on the Friday within the octave of Easter (Nilles, II 682), the Copts on Oct. 27 (Nilles II 709), the Armenians on the Saturday before the first Sunday of Advent (Nilles, II 619).

All the Saints of various religious orders. In modern times a number of religious families received permission from the S. Congregation of Rites to institute a feast of all the Saints of their respective orders. Most of them keep the feast on November 13: the Basilians, Benedictines, Camaldolese, Hermits of S. Augustine, Mercedarios, Vallumbrosans, Trinitarians, Servites, and Premonstratensians. The Carmelites celebrate it Nov. 14, the Cistercians Nov. 27, the Canons Regular on March 5, the Dominicans on Nov. 9, the Franciscans, Conventuals and Capuchins on Nov. 29.—These feasts were retained at the reform of the Calendar, whilst the French collective feasts of diocesan saints were all abolished.

Aloysius (Luigi) Gonzaga, C., the Patron of youthful Catholic students, B. 9 March, 1568, in the castle of Castiglione, near Mantua, the eldest son of Markgrave Ferdinand Gonzaga. Ardent love of purity and a spirit of severe penance distinguished him from early childhood. At the age of seven he began to manifest an earnest desire to live for God; at the age of eight he and his brother Rodolfo were placed at the court of Francis de' Medici, Grand Duke of Tuscany, and, after two years, were transferred to the court of the Duke of Mantua. At the age of eleven, A. resolved to resign his title and family honors to his brother. In 1580, he received his first communion at the hands of S. Charles Borromeo. In 1581, his father accompanied the Empress Mary of Austria, wife of Maximilian II, to Spain. He took with him his sons and they were made pages by King Philip to his son James. Now Aloysius resolved to quit the world and join the Society of Jesus. His father strongly opposed this, but was finally won over by the persistence of his son. Aloysius renounced the markgrave of Castiglione in favor of his brother Rodolfo and entered the Society of Jesus at Rome, Nov. 21, 1585. There he was prominent for his love to the Blessed Sacrament, for obedience and extreme humility. He singularly loved suffering and insult and the contempt of the world. His health gradually declined, and, in 1591, he was attacked by a malignant fever, caught from fever patients in a hospital at Naples. He died of this disease shortly after midnight, June 21, 1591. His relics are in a magnificent altar in the church of S. Ignazio, Rome. He was beatified in 1605 and canonized by Benedict XIII, in 1726. His feast was granted for Castiglione in 1618. Benedict XIII (a. 1729) declared him patron of youth, especially of students. He is also patron against sore eyes and pestilence. Alphonsus, Bp. of Astorga; v. S. Ansurus, 26 Jan.

Alphonsus Mary Liguori, Bp., C., and Doctor of the Church. B. 27 Sept., 1696, at Marianella, near Naples, of a noble Neapolitan family. Richly endowed with all the gifts of nature and grace, he obtained the degree of doctor of law at the age of sixteen. One day, after his opponent at court had exposed him to ridicule, he did not leave his room for three days, during which he "ate his heart with vexation and shame." He came forth resolved to give his services to God alone (1723). He was ordained to the priesthood 21 Dec. 1726 and gave missions to the poor in southern Italy. Under the guidance of Bp. Falcoja of Castellamare in 1732 he founded the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, at Scala, near Amalfi. The object of this Congregation was to give spiritual assistance to the forlorn country population by missions and other pious exercises. At the same time he commenced to publish those ascetical and dog-matical works which gave him a lasting name as a teacher of the spiritual life and as a Doctor of the Church. His first great work, printed a. 1748, a commentary on Busembaum's Moral Theology, saw eight editions during his lifetime. He is the most eminent leader and teacher of Moral Theology. With wise moderation he steered a middle course between excessive severity and exaggerated leniency. Probabilism, not unjustly antagonized at his time, he kept within its proper bounds, but also successfully defended it against Probabiliorism. In 1762, he was appointed by Clement XIII bishop of S. Agata dei Goti; in 1762 he resigned and retired to the house of his Congregation at Nocera dei Pagani, where, after unspeakable sufferings, caused especially by the open hostilities against his Congregation, he died, 1 Aug., 1787. He was beatified 6 Sept., 1816, by Pius VII, and canonized 26 May, 1839, by Gregory XVI. Pius IX declared him Doctor of the Church, 23 March, 1871. F. 2 Aug. dp. in the Latin Church, instituted 18 Sept., 1839. In his Congregation and at S. Agata dei Goti dp. 1 cl. oct. (Princ. Patr.) He is minor patron at Naples and Nocera. Seeb. 459.—L. Alphonsus (Alonzo) Rodriguez, C., S. J.; b. 25 July, 1531, at Segovia; he was a merchant and married; after the death of his mother, wife and children, he entered the Society of Jesus as a lay brother at Valencia (a. 1571); after one year's probation he was sent to Mt. Sion College, Palma, on the isle of Mallorca, where he remained all his life. 1580–1604 he was doorkeeper of the college, distinguished by a spirit of penance, obedience, and fortitude. He popularized the "Little Office of the Immaculate Conception," but is not its author. He is not to be confounded with Father Rodriguez, the author of "Christian Perfection," who was never canonized. D. 30 Oct., 1617, at Palma, was beatified 12 June, 1825, and canonized 15 Jan., 1888. Ambrose, Bp. of Milan (374-397), the first of the four great western Fathers of the Church; he was a celebrated orator, adviser of three emperors, standard-bearer of orthodoxy against the Arian and pagan parties, next to Emperor Theodosius the Great the most eminent personality towards the end of the 4th cent. B. in 340 at Treves, where his father was praefectus praetorio Galliarum; after his father's early death he, with his mother removed to Rome; there he acquired a solid scientific and legal education; he was first appointed councillor of the praefectus praetorio Italiae, Anicius Probus, then, in 373, governor of Upper Italy, residing at Milan. When here, after the death of the Arian bishop Auxentius, Catholics and Arians came into the church to elect a successor, and began a violent quarrel, Ambrose tried to mediate and pacify the parties, but was himself, by the voice of a child, elected bishop against his protest. Being still a catechumen, he was baptized (according to the custom prevalent at that time of procrastinating baptism) by a Catholic bishop, 30 Nov., 374, and consecrated, 7 Dec., 374. Now he zealously studied theological literature, especially the Greek Fathers; the temporal affairs he left to his brother Satyrus, led an ascetical life, celebrated Mass daily, preached often, and led many, amongst them the great S. Augustine, to the Church. [Arianism was rampant in his diocese, and in his efforts to eradicate it, he experienced many a fierce and bitter struggle. He was the champion of religious liberty in an age of usurpation of authority in spirituals by the secular power. When the Empress Justina demanded that at Milan the church of S. Victor be given to the Arians, he relentlessly resisted (386); also when the pagan party demanded the re-erection of the statue of Victory in the Senate chamber. He compelled the Emperor Theodosius to retract the severe edict against the Christians of Kallinikum in Mesopotamia (388) and also to perform the penance for the massacre at Thessalonica (390). That he stopped the Emperor at the porch of the church and publicly upbraided him, is shown by modern critics to have been greatly exaggerated. He died at Milan, 4 Apr., 397. He is patron of bees and wax-chandlers. F. Rom. Mart. 7 Dec., dp. in the Latin Church, full office in the Greek Church. During the Middle Ages in England, France and Germany his feast was held 4 Apr.; in many dioceses both feasts (O. P. up to date). In the Syrian Church 7 Dec. 2 cl.—At Milan: 30 Nov. Baptism of S. Anastasia, M., titular saint of the ancient church below the Palatine Hill at Rome. She was not a Roman, but suffered and died at Sirmium in Pannonia. Nothing is known of her except the name: her current story is purely fictitious, also her connection with S. Chrysogonus. According to a Roman legend of the 6th cent. she was the wife of the Roman Publius, who kept her imprisoned; after his death she attended the martyrs in Aquileja, where she was arrested, brought to Sirmium, then to the island of Palmaria near Terracina, where she was buried alive. These acts however are spurious. After 458 (under Emperor Leo I) her relics were transferred from Sirmium to the church of the Resurrection (Anastasis) at Constantinople and her cult with some of her relics was introduced in the Byzantine court church of the Resurrection at Rome, where the Pope celebrated the second Mass on Christmas day. The church first appeared under Damasus; it was one of the principal churches of the city and in honor of this martyr changed its name from Anastasis (Resurrection) to S. Anastasia. Her cult did not originate at Rome, but at Sirmium in Pannonia; from there it migrated to Constantinople and from there to Rome, where the legend changed the Sirmian martyr into a Roman. In the 5th cent. her name was inserted in the Canon of the Mass. It is also contained in the Proskomide to the Russian Mass. Her ancient commemorations are on 25 Dec., 6 Jan., and 8 Jan. at Sirmium, at Constantinople, and at Rome, 25 Dec. The Greeks call her "Pharmacolytria," i.e., she who renders poison ineffective and keep her F. with the full office of the day 22 Dec. At Zara in Dalmatia she is principal patroness, 15 Jan. dp. 1 cl. oct. (dp. maj. at Sebenico); tr. rel. (the Dalmatians believe that in the 9th cent. her relics came from Constantinople to Zara) 25 Sept. Her commemoration in the second Mass on Christmas Day is the last remnant of the former prominence enjoyed by this saint and her church. The second Mass of Christmas was formerly, at Rome, entirely of S. Anastasia. At Concordia (Venet) 30 Dec. dp.—Thr. M. 238—Buch.—W.W.—C. E.—Syn. 200—Achel. 187.—L. S.

Anastasius, the Persian, M. His Persian name was Magundat; he was the son of a magician at Rages in Persia and a knight in the army of Chosroes II; when that monarch carried the Cross from Jerusalem to Persia, S. Anastasius was made acquainted with Christianity by a goldsmith of Caesarea, left the army and was baptized at Jerusalem by S. Modestus, in 620. After having been monk for six years in the monastery of S. Anastasius, he was arrested at Caesarea by Marzban, the Persian procurator, sent to Persia and imprisoned at Beth-Saloe in Assyria; after long torments he was strangled and beheaded with 70 comp., 22 Jan. 628. His relics were sent to Resapha (Sergiopolis) in Syria, thence to Caesarea and Constantinople, and from there, under Emp. Heraclius, to Rome (Ss. Vincenzo ed Anastasio ad Aquas Salvias) together with his miraculous picture ("before which the demons tremble"). Anastasius, Bp. of Terni in Umbria; some accounts say that he came to Italy from Syria and was consecrated in 593 or 603; others contend that he was born at Terni in 550 of the Castelli family. Promoted to the episcopate, he is described as "a most humble and virtuous prelate, well versed in ecclesiastical lore, a lover of the poor, zealous in divine worship, and a shepherd watchful over his flock, exposed to the snares of Arian heretics who were numerous in the neighborhood." During the invasion of Totila, he was wonderfully preserved and survived to encourage and aid his people in the work of rebuilding their houses and churches demolished by the barbarians. Ancients, The 24, sitting about the throne of God, clothed in white garments and wearing crowns of gold, are, according to the Greek Synaxarium, a special order of heavenly beings, exalted above the angels, nearest to God and the mediators between God and men. According to a medieval superstition, God every Thursday in ember week confers with the 24 ancients and determines with them the fate of men and of nations for the coming three months. In the Middle Ages a special votive Mass in honor of the 24 Ancients was said on the Thursdays of the ember weeks, said to have been composed by John Peckham Archbishop of Canterbury (d. 1295); this Mass disappeared in the 15th century. The Copts have a solemn feast in their honor (holyday of precept) on Nov. 24 (Dec. 2). They are daily commemorated in the Coptic Mass.

Andrew of Crete, or of Jerusalem, Bp., C., theologian, homilist and hymnographer of the Greek Church. B. at Damascus, about 650; when 15 years old he entered the Laura of S. Sabas, near Jerusalem, and was enrolled amongst the clerics by Bishop Theodore of Jerusalem. In 680 he was sent to felicitate Emperor Constantine IV Pogonatus on the opening of the sixth Ecumenical Council; he was ordained deacon for the Hagia Sophia at Constantinople and appointed Metropolitan of Gortyna on the isle of Crete by Emperor Bardanes. He wrote many homilies and composed a great number of liturgical canons ("the highest effort of Greek hymnody"), by which he supplanted the form of hymnody (of Romanus Melodus), previously in use. His style is rugged, diffuse, and monotonous. His principal poem is the great penitential Canon (250 strophes) which is solemnly sung on Thursday before our Passion Sunday. D.

Andrew, Apostle. Born at Bethsaida, in Galilee, by profession a fisherman at Capharnaum. He was a brother of Simon Peter, attached himself to S. John the Baptist, was the "First Called" of Christ and hastened to introduce to Him his brother Peter (John I 35); he appears in the New Testament only John VI, 8 ss., John XII 20 ss., and Mark XIII 3. Greek names were not uncommon among the Jews from the 2d or 3d cent. b. c. Nicephorus (Hist. Eccl., II 39) states that Andrew preached in Capadocia, Galatia, and Bithynia, then in the land of the Anthropophagi (man-eaters) and the Scythian deserts (Polano), afterwards in Byzantium, where he appointed S. Stachys as its first bishop, and finally in Thrace, Macedonia, Thessaly, and Achaia. Tradition says that he was crucified by order of the Helladarch Aegeates (Aegeas) at Patrae in man-eating Achaea on the southeastern shore of the Black Sea and never came anywhere near Byzantium nor to Greece or Russia (Schermann, 251). He was tied, not nailed to the cross or to an olive tree. The opinion, that his cross was of the decussate form is not older than the 14th cent. His relics were brought to Constantinople in 356, from there, in 1210 (1208?), to Amalfi in Italy; the head, in 1462, to Rome. S. Gregory had a special devotion to him and put his name into the embolismus after the "Our Father" (Libera nos). Both the Latin (2 cl.) and the Greek Churches keep his F., 30 Nov.; we do not know why this day was selected. S. Andrew is patron of Achaia, Russia, and Scotland, of fishermen and old maids (his F. being celebrated at the end of the ecclesiastical year), against gout and a sore throat.—At Amalfi: 30 Nov. dp. 1 cl. Angilbert (Inglevert), C., O. S. B., abbot of Saint-Riquier, dioc. of Amiens. He was educated at the court of Charlemagne, was a pupil and friend of Alcuin, called "Homer" for his gift of poetry; he accompanied the young king Pepin to Italy in the capacity of Prime Minister and, later on filled the same post in the palace of Charlemagne. In 790 he received from the Emperor the revenues of the abbey of Centula; he had an intrigue (secret marriage?) with Charlemagne's daughter Bertha and became by her the father of two children: before 790, it seems, he led a very worldly life; c. 793 he took the habit at Centula and was elected abbot. He restored the abbey in sumptuous style, endowed it with a precious library, and built three churches, in which he introduced the "laus perennis" (uninterrupted choir service). He was several times sent to Rome by Charlemagne and served as his legate at the synod of Frankfort, in 794. D. 18 Feb., 814, 22 days after Charlemagne. Anna (Anne, Dina, Hannah), the Mother of Mary. S. Joachim and Anna, both of the tribe of Juda and the royal house of David, are venerated by the Church as the parents of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Nothing definite is known of S. Anne; not even the identity of her name is firmly established. The apocryphal Gospel of S. James (a compilation of early traditions, facts, and fables), composed probably in 6th cent. by a converted Jew, calls the Mother of Mary Anna and relates that Ss. Joachim and Anna were aged people with no hope of children, that the birth of Mary was announced by an angel and that the holy child was miraculously conceived under the Golden Gate at Jerusalem. This story was rejected by

Ss. Jerome, Augustine and others. S. James of Edessa says that Mary was Anna's only child. The theory that S. Anne was married three times (to Joachim, Clopas and Salom), is incongruous. (v. B. G., VIII, 567). The Greeks claim that the relics of S. Anne were brought from Bethlehem to Constantinople in 710 and were still there in 1333. The French tradition says that S. Lazarus brought her relics from Palestine and that S. Auspicius deposited them at Apt, towards the end of the 4th cent., or that S. Peter took the body from Jerusalem to Rome and a later pope gave it to S. Auspicius. The alleged relics were found, "by divine revelation," at Apt, in 788. S. Anne was venerated at Constantinople in 550, at Rome in the 8th cent. Her cult spread fast after the 15th cent. The old feast of Ss. Joachim and Anna is kept in the Greek Church on 9 Sept., full office. The later feast in the Greek and other Oriental Churches 25 July. (Tr. rel. in 710). In the Latin Church the Franciscans kept her F. in 1263 on the 26 of July; at Rome it was celebrated since 1307; in 1378 it was granted to England, in 1548 extended to the Universal Church; end of 15th cent. simpl.; it was abolished by Pius V, but restored by Gregory XIII; it is now dp. 2 cl. Anna Mary Taigi, (B.) of the Third Order of the Trinitarians. B. at Siena 29 May 1769. When she was 6 years old, her father, who had lost his wealth, took his family to Rome. In 1789 she (Gianetti) married Domenico Taigi, a servant of the Chigi family. By a life of severe penance and heroic sacrifice for the conversion of sinners, exercising anguish of soul, bodily pains and diabolical vexations, she rose to mystical eminence without neglecting her duties as wife and mother. Singular was the mysterious sun which was continuously before her mind, and in which she saw the most secret events of the past, present, and future. D. at Rome, 9 June 1837. B. in 1010, a son of the Saxon Count Walter of Pfullingen, he left his splendid military career to study the sacred sciences at Bamberg, where he also taught a while; he was appointed by Henry III provost at Goslar, in 1056 Archbishop of Cologne, with Empress Agnes guardian of Henry IV and, in 1062, Regent of the German Empire. In 1063 Adalbert of Bremen took charge of the regency, because the Archbishop's conscientious rule was distasteful to Henry IV; after Adalbert's death the regency was restored to Anno, but the misguided young Emperor hated and persecuted S. Anno to his death. He is the founder of Siegburg Abbey. Such was S. Anno's charity to the poor that, on his death bed, he was found to be destitute of the wherewithal to purchase food and medicine. He died at S. Gereon, Cologne, 4 Dec. 1075. He had been the center of all political and ecclesiastical activity in Germany, strenuously combating the two "beasts," simony and clerical avarice. Anselin = S. Gosselin.

Anselm, abbot, C. He was duke of Friuli in Upper Italy; as such he founded (750) the monastery of Fanano; two years later Nonantula monastery, which was richly endowed by his brother-in-law, Aistulph, king of the Longobards. Pope Stephen II appointed Anselm its first abbot and presented the relics of S. Sylvester to the abbey. After the death of Aistulph (756), Anselm was banished to Monte Cassino by the new king, Desiderius, but after seven years was restored by Charlemagne. D. at Nonantula, March 3, 803. F. at Nonantula dp. 3 March. H. L.

Anselm, the Younger, Bp. of Lucca in Tuscany, C.; b. at Milan, nephew and successor of Anselm I (1073), appointed by Alexander II; he was a faithful adherent of Gregory VII; as a penance for having taken the investiture from Emperor Henry IV, he took the habit of the monks of Cluny at Podolirone. Pope Gregory VII called him back to Lucca, but when he tried to reform the Canons of the Cathedral, they expelled him, in 1079; he retired to Canossa, was confessor to countess Mathilda and apostolic visitor of all the churches in Lombardy (1084) for Pope Urban II. D. at Mantua, 18 March 1086, but had never been bishop of Mantua. F. 18 March dp. at Lucca; dp. 1 cl. (Princ. Patr.) at Mantua. Pmp. at S. Miniato—P. B.—H. L.

Anselm, Bishop, C., Doctor of the Church. He was born of a noble Lombard family, at Aosta, March 6, 1033. His father was an unthrifty and violent man whom no submission would soften; his harshness, after his mother's death, drove Anselm to leave his home in despair. He spent three years in France and Burgundy; then came to Avranches in Normandy, where his countryman, Lanfranc of Pavia, had taught. Finally he followed Lanfranc to the monastery of Bec, not as a monk, but as a student. At Bec, in 1060, he took the Benedictine habit at the age of 27. In 1063, he succeeded Lanfranc as prior, in 1078, the founder of Bec, Herluin, as abbot. At Bec he wrote his "Monologium," an investigation of what reason knows of God. On the death of Archbishop Lanfranc of Canterbury the king, William the Red (Conqueror), seized the property of the Church (1089). When William fell sick, he named Anselm archbishop of Canterbury, whilst the latter was at Chester, restoring a monastery. He was consecrated, Dec. 4, 1093, and strenuously worked for the liberty of the Church and for its reform, by which course he incurred the displeasure of the king. In 1096, he received the pallium and, in 1097, against the will of the king, went to Rome to consult Pope Urban II. Banished by the king, and the Pope not daring to act against William, Anselm retired to Telesse and assisted at the synods held at Bari against the errors of the Greeks (1098 and 1099) and at a Roman synod which renewed the statutes against simony, concubinage, and lay investiture. After the death of Pope Urban and the sudden demise of King William (1100), Henry I recalled Anselm to England. He returned, protesting against lay investiture and the oath of allegiance. But when the new king practiced the same encroachments against the liberty of the Church, Anselm went back to Rome to consult Pope Paschal II (1103). Henry confiscated his possessions and forbade him to return. A reconciliation was effected, in 1105, at L'Aigle-sur-Rille, Normandy, and again at Canterbury, in August, 1107. The king renounced his rights to the investiture, whilst the Pope permitted the English bishops to take the oath of allegiance. After his return to England Anselm gained the confidence of the king to such an extent, that Henry, in 1108, before his journey to Normandy, appointed him regent. At a national council bishops were consecrated for the vacant sees. Anselm energetically defended the primal rights of the see of Canterbury and the customary privileges of the English Church in cult and liturgy. He was a man of unusual learning, and his writings, most of which were composed during his exile at Telese, his activity against the rationalistic, nominalistic, and extreme realistic tendencies of his age, have merited for him the title of a Doctor of the Church and "Father of Scholasticism." Many of his definitions and distinctions passed into theological terminology. In intellect he was without an equal at his time. He died at Canterbury, 21 April, 1109, in the midst of his brethren. His body rests in the Cathedral in front of the great rood. His feast is kept by the Latin Church (since 21 Jan. 1690), dp. on 21 April. He was declared a Doctor of the Church in 1720. In pre-Reformation times his feast was rarely kept in England, if at all. At Aosta Pmp. dp. 2 cl.—L. S.—St.—Rams.—W.W.—C. E.—Biogr.

Benedict; after 822 he was teacher at the school of New Corvey on the Weser. Recommended to Emperor Louis the Pious by Abbot Wala of Corvey and by Archbishop Ebbo of Reims, he was sent to evangelize Denmark under King Harald; he opened a school at Sleswic, in 926, but after the expulsion of King Harald crossed over to Sweden, where King Bjoern permitted him to found a mission; in 831 he was consecrated at Ingelheim first archbishop of Hamburg and nominated Apostolic Delegate for Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and the Slavs. His attempt to christianize Sleswic-Holstein was frustrated by the destruction of Hamburg by the Danes (945). Anskar was for some time a fugitive, but when, in 847, the see of Bremen had been united with that of Hamburg, he resumed his apostolic labors in Sleswic, Denmark (King Eric) and Sweden (King Olaf). In his last years he directed the missionary work, residing at Bremen, given to works of charity and piety. Antoninus, Archbp. of Florence, C., O. P.; b. at Florence, 1 March, 1389, son of Niccolò Pierozi, notary of the Florentine republic. In 1405, he took the Dominican habit from B. John Dominic at S. Maria Novella for the new convent of Fiesole and made his novitiate under B. Lawrence Ripafratta; he was a zealous promotor of the reform in-augured by John Dominic. His ascetical life, profound knowledge, zeal for the regeneration of discipline, his eminent gift of guiding souls, gained for him the confidence of his brethren. For 30 years he was superior of the Reformed Tuscan Congregation, O. P. 1439-1444 he was prior of S. Marco in Florence and of S. Maria sopra Minerva at Rome. In 1444, Pope Eugene IV forced him to accept the mitre; he took possession of his see (Florence) 13 March, 1446 and devoted himself to remedying abuses and strengthening discipline. His principal literary works are a History of the World (Chronicon) and a Moral Theology (Summa Confessionis). D. 2 May 1459. Pope Pius II conducted his funeral services. He was canonized by Hadrian VI, 31 May, 1523. F. 10 May Rom. Mart. dp. in the Latin Church; at Florence 2 May dp. 2 cl. and Tr. rel. 2 March dp. He is patron against fever. Biogr.—Buch.—H. L.—P. Antoninus, M., Patron of Piacenza, Italy. Tradition wrongly connects him with the Theban Legion; he was martyred at Piacenza at an unknown period and was highly venerated during the early Middle Ages. Antoninus, M., at Apamea in Syria; he was a stone cutter in a Syrian town; because he struck and felled an idol, he was driven from his own city and went to Apamea; there he built a church in honor of the Blessed Trinity. He was killed by pagans in a riot, probably during the reign of Emperor Constantius, son of Constantine. He is venerated in Syria since the 6th century on 3 Sept.; the Mart. Hier. calls him a "boy" of 20 years. In the MGr. 9 Nov. he is called "Antonius." By error of some martyrologist he, with the Egyptian bishop Aristion, has been appropriated by Capua (Rom. Mart. 3 Sept.) and by Pamiers in southern France (Rom. Mart. 3 Sept.); others make two saints out of one: Antonius and Antoninus. Achel. 177.—L. S.—H. L.

Antoninus, a boy M., venerated at Capua with S. Aristaeus, an alleged bishop of Capua. F. 3 Sept. Rom. Mart. at Capua dp. The boy Antoninus is the martyr Antoninus of Apamea, whilst Aristaeus is the Egyptian bishop Aristion. By the Camaldulenses of Frascati the feast of S. Antonino is celebrated 2 Sept. (1 cl.) Antoninus, M., Patron of Palencia in Spain. According to the spurious legend of Palencia Antoninus was b. at Toulouse, educated at Pamiers in southern France, led a hermit's life near Salerno in Italy for 19 years; having returned to Toulouse, he was imprisoned for his faith by his own uncle; set free, he retired to Pamiers with S. Almachius, whom he had converted, and S. John, a priest; they were found by the pagans and thrown into the river. The head of S. Antoninus was transferred to Palencia. This saint is identical with S. Antoninus of Apamea; his legend, through the ignorance of copyists, was transferred to Appamia (Pamiers) from Apamea. F. at Palencia 2 Sept. dp. 1 cl. oct.—Tr. rel. 18 May dp. maj.—Achel. 177.—P. Antoninus preached the gospel in Rouergue (Rodez) and was killed by the pagan populace at or near Pamiers. S. Antoninus is the Syrian martyr of Apamea (3 Sept.), who on account of the similarity of the name of his city, was appropriated by Appamia (Pamiers) in France and whose story was localized there. Antony, M., at Antinoe; v. S. Julian, 9 Jan.

Antony the Great, abbot, founder of Christian monasticism; b. at Coma, near Heracleopolis, in Upper Egypt, about 251; was baptized when 20 years old. After the death of his parents, having heard in church Matth. XIX, 21 and VI, 34, he gave his rich inheritance to the poor, sent his younger sister to a home for Christian virgins, and retired into a sepulchral monument, where he was sorely molested by demons. Later on he lived for 20 years on a mountain near Aphroditopolis, where he became celebrated for his miracles and collected around himself a number of disciples. During the persecution of Maximinian he went to Alexandria (311), to fortify the captive and condemned Christians, then retired into the desert of Clysma on the Red Sea; later on to Pispir on the Nile. He cultivated the soil and instructed his many disciples and visitors. The awful persecution of Christianity under Diocletian and his colleagues, by driving countless men and women as fugitives into the wilds surrounding the valley of the Nile, no doubt quickened the impulse felt by many in all ages to separate themselves permanently from the world. He was a personal friend of S. Athanasius and, about 335, preached in Alexandria against the Arians, Meletians, and Manichaeans; he corresponded with Emperor Constantine and his sons. D. in 356, 105 years old. He is called by the Copts "the Star of the Desert, the Father of Monks." He substituted for the individual ascetical life in the world, or in solitude, a community of hermits, which S. Pachomius changed into a community of monks. S. Athanasius wrote a rule for S. Antony's monks in 362. The Maronite monasteries and some Coptic establishments still claim to follow the rule of S. Antony. About 1090, Gaston of S. Didier de la Mothe founded the Hospitallers in honor of S. Antony (changed into an institute of Canons Regular by Boniface VIII in 1298; perished in the French Revolution). Some modern Oriental missionary societies in Armenia and Chaldea venerate S. Antony as their patron. He is patron against pestilence (the Sacred Fire or S. Antony's Fire) amongst men and animals, epilepsy, erysipelas and diseases of the skin, protector of hogs and other domestic animals, of butchers, brush-makers, grave-diggers and grave-yards. His relics were brought to Alexandria about 529, to Constantinople about 653, and in 980 to Mothe-saint-Didier near Vienne, where he became patron against the sacred fire, about 1090. His relics still exist. Antony of Padua, C., O. F. M.; b. in 1195 at Lisbon, Portugal; he joined the Canons Regular of San Vicente near Lisbon, in 1210; by his own wish he was sent to S. Cruz, Coimbra, in 1212, where he studied the Sacred Scriptures and, probably, was ordained priest. When, in 1220, the bodies of the Franciscan martyrs Ss. Berard and comp. were brought to Coimbra, the young priest was fired with zeal for martyrdom and, with the permission of his superiors, entered the Franciscan Order at Coimbra, changing his name Fernando to "Antony." According to his desire he was sent to Morocco, but was compelled by sickness to return; his ship being driven by storms to Sicily, he hurried from Messina to the great chapter held by

S. Francis at Assisi, 30 May, 1221. After having been refused admission by several Italian superiors, because of his sickly appearance, a guardian in the Romagna had compassion on him and sent him to the hermitage of S. Paolo near Forlì. There his knowledge and talents were discovered, and he was sent out to preach; he evangelized the north of Italy and the south of France with great success; after one of his sermons the Pope called him "Ark of the Covenant," because he knew the Scriptures by heart. He was the first to teach theology in the Order, therefore the Franciscans venerate him as a "Doctor" of their Order. He lectured at Montpellier, Bologna, Padua, and Toulouse; he also successfully defended the rule of S. Francis against the relaxations effected by the General Elias. The last years of his life A. spent at Padua, where he died of dropsy, 13 June, 1231, on a Tuesday, wherefore Tuesday is dedicated to him. He was canonized 30 May, 1232. Usually he is called "the Miracle Worker of Padua"; numberless miracles followed after his death, but the oldest account does not contain a single miracle wrought during his lifetime; his Life has been obscured by unreliable legends. He is invoked by those who wish to find things lost; he is also patron of the Poor. "S. Antony's Bread" (originated in 1895 at Toulon) is an alms given in honor of S. Anub (Anuph, Nub, Nuph), hermit and abbot in the desert of Scete, later in the desert of Terarnuthum, Egypt; d. about 460. F. 6 June. H. L.

Anub and Bissoi, Mm., at Heliopolis (or Latopolis) in Egypt, under the prefect Arrhianus. With them were tortured and imprisoned Sergius, the son of Theodore the Scholastic; Apa Meneson, a priest, and his brother Apa Plou; Paesis and his brothers: George, John, Isidore, and Piscoes, the priest Apa Cragon, Sarapamon, John, Zachary, Pithosh, Macarius, James, Turodas, Apollon, Amun and Dioscurus. Eg. 111. F. 13 June in the Coptic Church. Cal. Copt.

Anub, M., at Alexandria, under the prefect Armenius; was buried at Naisi in Egypt by S. Julius of Akfahs, in 304. F. 18 July. Eg. 109.

Anysia, V., M.; daughter of rich and pious parents at Thessalonica; she led a retired life of prayer and charity; on her way to church she was asked by a pagan soldier to assist at a sacrifice; when she refused, the soldier killed her, under Maximian, in 303. Her acts are unreliable. F. 30 Dec. Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church full office. L. S.—H. L.—F. J.

Anysius (Onisius), Bp. of Thessalonica and, under Pope Damasus, papal delegate in Eastern Illyria; he was a disciple and successor of S. Ascholus (383); during his administration, in 389, by command of Emp. Theodosius I, the horrible massacre took place in the theatre of Thessalonica; at a synod, in 391, he condemned the heretic, Bishop Bonosus of Sardica; he was a strong partisan of S. John Chrysostom against Theophilus of Alexandria. D. 30 Dec. 410. F. 30 Dec. Rom. Mart. (inserted under Gregory XIII). L. S.—H. L.

Aod = S. Ehud.

Août = S. Aigulf.

Apellen = v. S. Ampelius, 14 May.

Apelles (Apellius), a follower of S. Paul (Rom. XVI, 10), bishop of Smyrna before

S. Polycarp; the Greeks say, he was bishop of Heraclea. F. Rom. Mart. 22 Apr. In the Greek Church full office with Ss. Stachys, Amphilus, Urbanus, Narcissus, and Aristobulus. 31 Oct.; at Smyrna 22 Ap. d. H. L.—Scherm.

Apelles (Apellen), priest and monk at Acoris in Upper Egypt, 4th century. He had been a blacksmith, which trade he practiced amongst the monks in the desert. F. 15 July. MGr. He is identical with S. Ampelius of Bordighera in Liguria. H. L. Scherm.

Aper, M., at Amendolare; v. S. John, 8 July.

Aper (Evre), Bp. of Toul, 500–507, second successor of S. Auspicius. An abbey was founded in his honor at Toul. His relics were elevated by Bishop Gerard, in 978. F. 15 Sept. Rom. Mart., at Nancy 16 Sept. dp. P. B.—Mg.

Aper (Asper, Aupre), priest and hermit; b. at Sens; he attached himself to the clergy of Grenoble, was parish priest at Terrasse (Isère); having been calumniated, he retired to Maurienne and led a solitary life near Chambre. 7th century. His relics were transferred from S. Avre to S. André, Grenoble. F. 5 (formerly 11) Dec. at Grenoble; Cult approved 1 Dec. 1907.—P. B.—Mg.

Aphraates (Pharhadh), hermit, the "Persian Sage"; a Persian by birth; after his conversion he left his pagan surroundings and went to Edessa, where he locked himself up in a cell; from the persecutions by the Arians he fled to Antioch, where he sustained the Catholic cause; after the death of Emperor Valens he returned to his cell at Edessa. He probably was bishop of the convent of Mar Mattai near modern Mosul, about 337–345. He is the oldest Syrian writer; he left 23 homilies on moral and controversial topics. F. 7 Apr. Rom. Mart.—29 Jan. MGr. The Maronites keep his feast 7 Apr. L. S.—H. L.—Wr. 32.

Aphrodisia, V., M. Her relics are in the church of S. Fermo Maggiore, Verona. F. 5th Sunday after Pent. Archiv.

Aphrodisius, M., in Africa; v. S. Peter, 14 March.

Aphrodisius Commentariensis (secretary), M., alleged companion of the Centurion Longinus, who assisted at Christ's crucifixion. The legend relates that his tongue was torn out of his throat. F. 15 March. L. S.—H. L.

Aphrodisius, Malina, and the lector Abagus; Caralippus and Agabius, Mm., at Tarsus in Cilicia, 28 Apr. Rom. Mart. Aphrodisius died in prison. Caralippus (Charalampus) and the eunuch Eusebius belong to Nicomedia. Malina and Agapus belong to Tarsus. The Church of Beziers erroneously claims this Aphrodisius and pretends that he was her first bishop. The Spaniards have transplanted all these Mm. from Tarsus and Nicomedia to Las Ventas de Caparra, dioc. of Palencia, and keep their F. 28 Apr. dp. in the dioc. of Palencia. Achel. 136.—L. S.—H. L.

Aphrodisius, Jucundus and Firmus, Mm., at Tarsus in Cilicia, 9 May; Aphrodisius is the saint of 28 Apr.; the provenience of Firmus and Jucundus is unknown. H. L.

Aphrodisius, first Bishop of Béziers, M.; is said to have been born at Hermopolis, Egypt and to have given shelter to the Holy Family. His "Life" however is a mere legend; he may have been the first bishop of Béziers, but it is certain that he belongs to the 3d or 4th cent. He is patron against epilepsy and excessive rains. F. Rom. Mart. (ancient) 22 March; in dioc. of Béziers 28 Apr. dp. 1 cl., at Montpellier dp. maj. L. S.—P. B.—Mg.

Aphrodisius, a priest, and 30 comp., Mm., at Alexandria in Egypt. 30 Apr. Rom. Mart. This saint never existed. The rubric of 30 Apr. probably read: "At Aphrodisia in Caria Ss. Diodotus, priest, and Rodopianus. At Alexandria 30 Mm." The copyist made of Aphrodisia (the city) a martyr and joined him to the thirty martyrs of Alexandria.—Achel.

Aphrodisius, Meldas, Leontius, Antoninus, Macrobius, Valerianus, and comp., Mm., at Scythopolis in Palestine. F. 4 May. Mrt.

Aphrodisius, and 110 comp., Mm., at Tarsus in Cilicia. Their doubtful names, v. Chevalier, I, 290. Probably this Aphrodisius is the saint of 29 Apr. and his companions are doubtful. 10 May. H. L.

Aphrodisius, M., at Alexandria. His name stands alone in the old Syrian Mart., 14 May. His companions in later Martyrologies are (13 May): Agrippa, Sabinus, Gisia (?), Lucius, Cyrilla, Juvinus and two others. 14 May. Aphrodisius alone belongs to Alexandria. Chev. Eg. 73.

Aphrodisius, M., in Cilicia; he was burnt with torches and crushed to death between two stones. The MGr. contain an absurd story of this martyr, how a lioness was let loose upon him in the arena, but instead of devouring him, stood upon her hind legs and preached to the people, many of whom were converted by this singular preacher. L. S. Ju. 282. F. 21 June. MGr.

Aphrodisius, M., at Pseudon; v. S. Florentinus, 27 Sept.

Aphrodisius, ascete, disciple of S. Saba,

Aphthone = v. S. Aptonius.

Aphthonius, M., in Persia; v. S. Acindynus, 2 Nov.

Aphthonius, Bp. of Zeugma in Mesopotamia; at first he was a monk in the monastery of Publius in Egypt, after the death of Publius he governed the Syrian monks of the monastery, his brother Theocnus the Greek monks. 4th cent. 2 Nov. H. L.

Apodemius, M., at Saragossa; v. S. Optatus, 16 Apr.

Apollon, M., at Basta in Egypt. F. 4 Feb. Eg. 101.

Apoli, son of S. Justus, M., under Diocletian, at Basta in Egypt. He is buried in Khandak monastery near Cairo. F. 25 July. Eg. 109. He may be identical with S. Apollon.

Apollina, V., M., at Alexandria, a saint, venerated by the Copts 23 Jan.; perhaps she is the Apollonia of the Latins.

Apollinaris Syncretica (viz. of senatorial family), V., reputed daughter of the consular prefect Anthemius of Constantinople; returning from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem she fled from her companions, put on a monk's habit, and lived in a cell near the monastery of S. Macarius in Egypt, under the name of Dorotheus. The story that she was accused of having seduced her own sister is apocryphal. D. in 420. F. 4 Jan. MGR. 5 Jan. Mz. L. S.—H. L.

Apollinaris, Bp. of Hierapolis in Phrygia, one of the great lights of the Church in the 2nd century; he refuted the doctrines of Christian stoicism and exposed the hypocrisy of the Montanist (Cataphrygian) heresy, at a synod of 27 bishops; he presented an apology of the Christian faith to Emperor Marcus Aurelius. F. 8 Jan. Rom. Mart.—3 Feb. dp. at Smyrna (Latin). He is unknown in the Greek Calendar. H. L.

Apollinaris, M., in Africa; see S. Cyriacus, 21 June.

Apollinaris of Ravenna, Bp., M. According to the partly apocryphal acts he was born at Antioch in Syria, came to Rome with S. Peter and was sent by him to Ravenna about 50. Tortured and driven away three times, he is said to have evangelized Dalmatia and adjoining countries. After having returned a fourth time, Vespasian issued a decree of banishment against the Christians; Apollinaris was kept concealed for a time, but as he passed out of the gates of the city, was set upon and savagely beaten, probably at Classis, a suburb; he lived for seven days. The date of his death can not be ascertained. Perhaps he belongs to the 2nd century and was not a disciple of S. Peter. His relics were buried in Classe and, in 549, were transferred to his new church at Classe; they now rest in the cathedral of Ravenna. F. (not very ancient) 23 July dp. in the Latin Church, also MGR.—At Ravenna dp. 1 cl. oct. Tr. rel. 2 Apr. dp. He is patron of the prov. of Aemilia (dp. 2 cl.) and of Campagna (dp. maj.). He is also patr. against gravel. His name is in the Canon of the Ambrosian Mass. The relics at S. Apollinaris at Remagen on the Rhine, are not of this saint. Lins. 69.—L. S.

Apollinaris, M., at Reims; see S. Timotheus, 23 Aug. L. S.

Apollinaris and Vitalis, Mm.; 19 July. Mrt.

Apollinaris, the most illustrious of the bishops of Valence on the Rhône, brother to S. Avitus. B. about 450, at Vienne, son of the Senator-Bishop S. Isichius; he was elected bishop of Valence, in 487; his diocese had suffered much from the barbarians and the scandal caused by the dissolute bishop Maximus; Apollinaris restored discipline and eradicated the Arian heresy; the Burgundian kingdom he brought from Arianism to the Church; exiled by King Sigismund one year after the synod of Epaon, in 517, he returned, in 518. D. at Valence, in 520. His relics were cast into the Rhône by Huguenots in the 16th century. F. 5 Oct. (Princ. Patr.). dp. 1 cl. oct. at Valence (formerly 2nd Sunday in Oct.); Rom. Mart. L. S.—P. Aquilinus, Speratus, Civinus, Felix, Crescinius, Lutatus, Nazarius, Vetusa, Generosa, Januarius, another Januarius, Titianus, and Nessa, Mm., in Africa; 18 July Mart. Hier. They are the Scillitan martyrs of 17 July. Aquilinus = Acyllinus; Civinus = Cittinus; Vetusa = Vestina; Lutatus = Laetantius; Nazarius = Narzales; Januarius = Januaria; Crescinius = Vetturius, etc. This is a striking example of how the Mart. Hier. disfigures the names of historical martyrs and forms new groups of them.

Aquilinus, C., Bp. of Evreux; b. at Bayeux about 620; he did military service against the Wends and married, but left his worldly career under Clovis II, to serve the sick and poor at Evreux; he succeeded S. Arator, priest, Fortunatus, Felix, Silvius and Vitalis, Mm., at Alexandria, "who died in prison." F. 21 Apr. Rom. Mart. This group is spurious. Arator ought to be "Aristus." Vitalis probably is S. Vitalis of Bologna, who died in prison; it is uncertain who the others are. Mart. Hier. gives "Fortunata" in place of Fortunatus, and Salvius instead of Silvius. This example illustrates how hopelessly the Martyrologies have mixed up the names of martyrs. Achel.—Comm.

Argyrus, M., in Africa; v. S. Victor, 1 Jan.

Ari, priest and monk, a Coptic saint. He was a priest at Pshati (Shetnufi); upon the arrival of the order of Diocletian, in 303, he was brought before Culcianus, tortured on the rack and struck with iron rods, but healed and set free by the Archangel Michael. He was recaptured and, with forty companions, brought to Alexandria; the companions were beheaded nine months later. Ari was again tortured, thrown into a furnace and beheaded at Tatiadoru in Egypt. This story of the Coptic Synaxarium is not trustworthy. Ari was buried at Shetnufi by S. Jules of Akfahs. F. 6 Jan. Cal. Copt.—Eg. 130, also 2 Aug. Eg. 109.

Ariadne, V., M., a slave of Tertullus, in the city of Prymnessus in Phrygia; she was imprisoned and racked, because she refused to take part in a pagan feast under Antoninus Pius; it is said that after the torture she fled to the mountains, which opened to protect her, thus giving her both a tomb and the crown of martyrdom. Her acts are partly fabulous. F. 17 Sept. Rom. Mart. dp. at Smyrna. 18 Sept. MGr. H. L. All. 149.

Arialdus, deacon at Milan, M. With the soldier S. Herlembald, he was the leader of the reform party, the "Pataria," at Milan, about 1056; b. at Cuzago, between Como and Milan, he worked strenuously against simony and incontinency among the clergy, especially of Archbishop Guido (1046–1070); when the Archbishop excommunicated him, he was exculpated at Rome. Archbishop Guido, himself excommunicated for simony, relentlessly persecuted his adversaries; he caught Arialdo, had his hands and nose cut off, blinded and killed him on the Lago Maggiore, 27 June, 1065. Cult approved 13 July, 1904. F. 27 June at Milan; 25 June at Novara; v. S. Herlembald.—L. S.—H. L.

Arianell (Arganhell), V., daughter of Guidgentivai, a man of royal family, probably in Gwent, Wales; delivered of an evil spirit by S. Dyfrig, she devoted herself to a religious life under S. Dyfrig (Dubricius). F. unknown. B. G., I, 168.

Arianus (Arrhianus), and four "protectors," i. e., officers, Mm., at Nicomedia. Arianus was prefect of Upper Egypt (Thebaid); he had furiously persecuted the Christians, but was converted by S. Philemon, the piper of Antioe, and brought to Nicomedia by four officers, whom he converted. All five were cast into the sea by order of Diocletian. The story is very doubtful. The relics of S. Arianus were brought to Antioe. F. 8 March. Rom. Mart. In the Greek Church 14 Dec. full office with Thyrsus, Philemon, etc. In the Coptic Church 5 March; 4 March, Eg. 102.—H. L.

Aristicleus, priest, Demetrianus, deacon, and Athanasius, lector; Mm., at Salamina, Cyprus, under Maximinus. F. 23 June MGR.; 20 June Mz.

Aristides, C., a philosopher and Christian apologist; a native of Athens; converted to the faith, he wrote an apologetic treatise and handed it to Emp. Hadrian (Cath. Encycl., I, 712). The aim of this "Apology" is to show that only the Christians have the true conception of God. Aristides had been initiated in the Eleusinian mysteries. F. 31 Aug. Rom. Mart.; at Athens, 13 Sept. dp.: (Latin)—W.W.—Buch.—H. L.

Aristion, reputed disciple of Christ, often mentioned by Papias (Euseb., III, 39, 7, 14), Bp. of Smyrna. He is mentioned in the acts of S. Barnabas as a companion of the deacon Timon in the latter's apostolic labors in the island of Cyprus. According to the MGr. S. Aristion was martyred at Alexandria, according to others at Salamis in Cyprus. In Latin Mart. 22 Feb.; at Jerusalem 25 Feb.; in the Copt. Church 23 Apr. L. S.—P. B.—Rams.

Aristion and Lucianus, Mm., bishops of unknown sees; 4 March.

Aristion (Arestus, Aristonippus, Aristonus), Bp., M., of some town in Lower Egypt, suffered at Alexandria (or was he bishop of Alexandria and Issum in Cilicia, now Alexandrette?), 3 Sept., old Syrian Mart. F. at Alexandria. The Mart. Hier. has confused him with S. Antoninus of Apamea and by Ado he was transferred with the latter to Capua in Campania ("Antonini pueri et Aristaei"; Ep.). 3 Sept. * Arius, priest, at Alexandria; 6 June, Old Syr. Mart. Achelis. He is the great heretic who denied the divinity of Christ. B. about 250, in Libya, priest at Alexandria, ordained by S. Achilles in 313; he was condemned by a provincial synod at Alexandria in 321 and again at the Council of Nice, in 325. D. at Constantinople, 6 June, 336. His name was copied from the old Arian Syriac Mart. by the editor of the Mart. Hier. The copyist did not suspect that his source was compiled by Arians; under the corrupt form of "Artotis" or "Arpotis" the name of the arch-heretic remained in the martyrologies of the Middle Ages.

Arixus, M., at Rome; v. S. Hisicius, 2 July.

Armagil (Armél, Arzel), abbot; b. about 482 in Britain, related to S. Pol de Leon; ordained priest, he crossed over to Brittany and lived a hermit's life at S. Arzel, dioc. of Leon; Plon-Ermil also perpetuates his memory. D. 16 Aug. 552. F. 16 Aug. v. S. Arthmael. L. S.

Armentarius, C., Bp. of Pavia; he succeeded S. Damian. Under his pontificate (726) the body of S. Augustine was brought to Pavia; also Pope Constantine issued a declaration that the see of Pavia always had been immediately subject to the Holy See and not to the metropolitan see of Milan, as advanced by S. Benedict, archbishop of Milan. D. 730. Body in the cathedral. F. 30 Jan. dp. at Pavia. Tr. rel. simpl. 23 Apr. H. L. Rams.

Armentarius, Bp. of Antibes, about 5th century. Honored at Grasse, to which town the see of Antibes was transferred in the 13th cent.; he is patron of Draguihan, dioc. of Fréjus, where his relics are venerated. F. 30 Jan. 16 Feb. dp. at Fréjus. P. B.

Armentarius, Archbp. of Aix, successor of S. Menesphale, about 450. His relics were brought to S. Sauveur from the church of S. Lawrence. F. 7 Oct. P. B.

Armogastes, M., a Catholic Vandal count at the court of the Arian king Geiseric (in the service of his son Theodoric); refused to turn Arian and was tortured by having cords strung about his forehead and legs; then he was sentenced to serve as cowherd near Carthage, where he died of exposure, "lest the Romans should venerate him as a Martyr" if he were done to death by the sword. The rubric of the Roman Martyrology reads: "In Africa the memory of the holy confessors Armogastes, Count, Masculas Archimimus and of Satur, the procurator of the king's house." This may refer to four martyrs: Armogastes, Masculas, Archimimus and Satur; it may also mean: The Count Armogastes of Masculas, the chief of a theatrical company and of Satur. The reading suggested is: Armogastes, a count, the superintendent of the theatre at Masculas. Another explanation may be: Armogastes, a count, and with him suffered the unnamed chief of the company of actors from Masculas, and Saturus. One scarcely conceives a Roman "Comes," a Christian, having to be described as manager of a theatre. F. 29 March. Rom. Mart. sem. in prov. of Algiers.—L. S.—H. L.—Rams. 186.

Armon or Harmon, Welsh for S. Germanus of Auxerre, who is patron of several Welsh parishes. 31 July.

Ansegisil (married to Begga, a daughter of Pepin of Heristal), he became the ancestor of the Carolingian kings. In 613 S. Arnulph was elected bishop of Metz, to succeed S. Pappolus; he left the blood-stained court of Chlotar II; his wife Doda took the veil at Treves; but, in 622, he was compelled by Chlotar to assume the office of chief minister of Dagobert I, the new king of Austrasia; he resigned all his dignities in 627 and spent the rest of his life in a cave at Remiremont in the Vosges, with his friend S. Romaric; d. at Remiremont 16 Aug., 640; his body was brought to Metz 18 July, 641, and is now in his own church. He is patron of brewers and millers and invoked as finder of things lost. F. in Brev. of Metz (1545) 16 Aug. and 18 July; now at Metz, 19 Aug. dp. maj.—L. S.—P. B.—Mg.

Arnulph (Arnold), O. S. B., Bp. of Soissons; a descendant of the noble French family de Pamèle; b. about 1040, at Tydenhem, Flanders; he left the military career to become a monk and, later, was abbot at S. Médard Soissons. In 1081 he was elected bishop of Soissons, but was driven from his see by the usurper Ursio; he resigned, founded Oudenbourg (Aldenburg) Abbey, near Bruges, in 1084, and died there, 14 Aug., 1087. Artemius, M., at Nicaea; v. S. Eladius, 8 July.

Artemius, M., at Pas-de-Calais; v. S. Justus, 18 Oct.

Artemius, Megalomartyr (i.e., the Great Martyr). He was a veteran officer, placed in high command by Constantine the Great. He brought the relics of Ss. Andrew and Luke to Constantinople. By Emperor Constantius he was appointed imperial prefect (Dux Augustalis) of Egypt. During the reign of Constantius he was a fanatical Arian, hunting down S. Athanasius and other bishops, monks, and virgins. But if Artemius persecuted the Catholics, he also worried the pagans by plundering their temples and knocking off the heads of idols. Perhaps he was converted to the Catholic faith after the death of Constantius. On the accession of Julian, on an accusation brought against him by the heathens (destroying idols) Artemius was conducted to Antioch and after many torments put to death, 20 Oct., 363. The acts of his martyrdom do not mention the Arian tendencies of their hero; the Greek Church, relying on these acts, has adopted Artemius into its sacred Calendar and Baronius drafted him from the Greek Menaea into the Rom. Mart. His relics were brought to Constantinople and a church was built in honor of S. Artemius under Emp. Anastasius (d. 518) about 505. F. 20 Oct. full office in the Greek Church. 15 Oct. in the Coptic Church. L. S.—P. B.—Thr. M. 239.

Athanasius the Great, "the Father of Orthodoxy," C., Bp. of Alexandria, 328-373, Doctor of the Church. The famous champion of the Catholic Faith in the Blessed Trinity against Arius, who denied the Divinity of Christ and in this denial was upheld by powerful secular and ecclesiastical partisans. B. at Alexandria of Christian parents; became deacon and secretary to Bishop Alexander, with whom, in 325, he went to the Council of Nice. When, in 328, Alexander died, Athanasius was unanimously elected to the see of Alexandria. His history is identical with that of the Nicene Creed; five times he was banished, seventeen years he spent in exile. When he refused to reconcile Arius, he was deposed, upon false accusations of the Meletian party, by the Eusebian synod of Tyre, in 335, and banished to Treves by Constantine; he was allowed to return by Constantine II, 17 June, 338. He was again accused by the Eusebians before the three Emperors and Pope Julius, deposed at Antioch, in 341; the Cappadocian Gregory, was put in his place by force, amidst outrageous scenes. Athanasius fled to Rome, where he was vindicated by a synod; but only after the Council of Sardica (343) and the death of Gregory (345) Emperor Constantius found it expedient to restore him. He returned to Alexandria, 21 Oct., 346. At the synods of Arles (353) and Milan (355) Constantius again secured a condemnation of Athanasius; 9 Feb., 356, he was attacked in Theonas church during the night services, but escaped in the turmoil and fled to the desert; the Cappadocian George, who replaced the deposed prelate, persecuted the Catholic bishops; after the death of Constantius (361) and the assassination of George, Athanasius was permitted to return (362). But Julian the Apostate the same year again exiled him as "a disturber of the peace and an enemy of the gods." By a ruse he was saved on the Nile (24 Oct., 362) and escaped to the desert. Restored by Jovian (363), he was exiled a fifth time by Valens, but was hastily recalled after four months. From then on he was left undisturbed till his death, which occurred at Alexandria, 2 May, 373. For fifty years the defence of the orthodox faith against the Arians centered around Athanasius; he was the religious genius of his age, one of the greatest men of all times. He is called "the Father of Scientific Theology." His relics were brought to the Hagia Sophia in Constantinople, from there to Venice (S. Croce). F. 2 May in the Latin (dp.), Greek (full office) and Maronite Churches. The Greeks and Syrians have a common feast of Ss. Athanasius and Cyril, 18 Jan., full office. Athanasius of Clysma, M., ("Megalo-Martyr"); of royal family, magistrate of Clysma, in Arcadia, Egypt; because he refused to persecute the Christians and celebrated Christmas with them, he was beheaded at Alexandria. F. 12 (18) July in Copt. Ch.—Cal. Copt.—Eg.

Athanasius, first Bp. of Naples, C.; he was a native of Naples, of which city his father Sergius was dux or consul; he restored the sacred edifices, including the church of S. Januarius, destroyed by the Saracens, founded a hospice and instituted a service for the ransom of captive Christians; he assisted at the Lateran Synod under Nicholas I; because he resisted simoniacal practices, he was made a prisoner, with all his brothers, at Sorrento, by his nephew Sergius. The clergy and people of Naples soon forced Sergius to release their bishop, but the young Duke threatened him with worse than imprisonment, unless he abdicated. The Emperor Louis II then intervened and sent the Duke of Amalfi to conduct S. Athanasius to a place of safety. Athanasius died on a journey to Rome, near Veroli, 15 July, 872. His body was brought to Mte. Cassino and, in 877, to Naples. F. 15 July dp. maj. (minor patron) at Naples and at Veroli.—Tr. rel. 7 Apr. sem. Rom. Mart. 15 July.—H. L.—Off. pr.—Rams.

Gregory the Great, as head (abbot) of 40 monks from S. Andrew's; after a prolonged stay at Lérins, they landed at Ebbsfleet near Sandwich; they were met at Thanet by King Ethelbert of Kent, who permitted them to preach Christianity among his subjects and gave them the old Roman-British church of S. Martin, outside the walls of Canterbury, the Kentish capital. After the baptism of S. Ethelbert (Pentecost, 597), Augustine returned to France and was consecrated bishop of the English by S. Aethorius of Lyons. On Christmas day, 597, more than 10,000 Saxons were baptized in the Thames; he built the monastery of Ss. Peter and Paul at Canterbury (the original church was dedicated to S. Pancras), which was blessed 9 Jan., 605. In 601, Gregory I sent Ss. Mellitus, Paulinus, and Justus, with a number of monks, to bring the pallium to Augustine, who was constituted metropolitan of 12 bishoprics to be established in the south of England; at the same time another metropolitan see was to be established at York, with 12 bishoprics in the North. These regulations were carried out only in part: the sees of London and Rochester being founded. S. Augustine did not succeed in getting the Welsh bishops to conform with the practices of the Roman Church or to coöperate with him in converting the Anglo-Saxons (Synod under Augustine's oak); d. at Canterbury, 26 May 605. Augustin, Aurelius, C., Bp. of Hippo Regius, the greatest Father and Doctor of the Latin Church. He was born, 13 Nov., 354, at Tagaste, in Numidia; his father, Patricius, remained a pagan till shortly before his death; his mother, S. Monica, was a zealous Christian, but Augustine was not baptized in his childhood. He studied at Tagaste, Madaura, and Carthage; in the two latter cities he taught rhetoric. Following his impulsive nature he plunged headlong into vice, to the deep sorrow of his pious mother. Also in religion he went astray: for nine years (374-383) he was Hearer (lowest degree) in the Manichaean sect. In 383, he went to Rome, and from there was called to Milan, to teach rhetoric. The study of Neo-Platonic writings, the sermons of S. Ambrose, and the reading of the Epistles of S. Paul brought him nearer to the Church. He graphically relates his own conversion in his "Confessions." In 386, he resigned his position and retired with his mother to Cassiciacum, near Milan, to prepare for baptism, which, with his son Adeodatus and his friend Alypius, he received (Easter, 387) at the hands of S. Ambrose. Now, after so many moral and intellectual errors, he began to lead the life of a saint. He staid in Rome one year, returned to Africa, in 388, was ordained priest and appointed preacher at the Church of Hippo Regius, in 391. In 395 he was elected bishop of Hippo, to succeed Valerius; he died at Hippo, 28 Aug. 430.—Augustine, a fiery soul of mighty will power, is one of the greatest thinkers in history. His life is unfolded to us in documents of unrivalled richness, and of no great character of ancient times have we information comparable to that contained in the "Confessions" and "Retractations." He was one of the most prolific geniuses that humanity has ever known, and is admired not only for the number of his works, but also for the variety of subjects, embracing the entire realm of thought. They comprise philosophy (strongly Christianized Neo-Platonism), general apologetics (City of God), controversies with heretics (Manichaeans, Donatists, Pelagians, Semipelagians and Arians) Scriptural exegesis, dogmatic and moral theology, pastoral theology, and homiletics (Cath. Encycl., II, 89 ss.). His relics, in 508, owing to the irruption of the Vandals, were brought to Sardinia; in 721, to Pavia, where they rest in S. Michele in Cielo d'Oro. He is patron of theologians, printers, and brewers, is invoked also against sore eyes. F. 28 Aug. Rom. Mart., dp. in the Bajus (Baye), priest, M., at Issoudun, diocese of Bourges; he was a companion of S. Thalassius, Bp., M., 5th century. F. 30 Oct. P. B.

Balay (Biabil), and Martin, Cc., hermits at Ploermellac, Brittany; they were disciples of S. Winwaloe at Landevenec. F. 12 July. P. B.

Balbina, a Roman V., M. She gave her name to a catacomb which lay on the Via Appia, over which Pope Mark erected a basilica in the 4th century. In a large ancient hall on the Aventine Hill, about the 6th century, a church was erected in her honor, which became a cardinalial title. The purely legendary account of the martyrdom of S. Alexander claims that B. was a daughter of S. Quirinus, the tribune who was buried in the catacomb of Praetextatus on the Via Appia. The cathedral of Cologne claims to have her relics. F. 31 March. Rom. Mart.; end of Middle Ages in Cologne and other German dioceses; simpl. at Sitten, Switzerland; dp. at S. Peter's, Rome. R. Sott. 259.—L. S.—H. L.—P. B.—F. J.

Barbanus, M., at Beauvais; v. S. Maxentia, 20 Nov.

Barbara, V., M. According to her apocryphal legend she was a daughter of a fanatical pagan at Heliopolis (Baalbeck) in Syria. Locked up in a tower by her anxious father she became acquainted with Christianity, professed it, and was killed by her own father under Maximin Daja. Her companion in martyrdom was a woman called Juliana. Her cult was unknown before the 7th century. Metaphrastes in the 10th century first relates her fantastic story. By some hagiographers she is considered a mythical personage. Because the legend claims that her unnatural father was killed by lightning and because a tower is her attribute on pictures, she is patroness of architects, artillery, prisoners, founders, stone-masons, grave-diggers, fortifications, powder magazines (French: S. Barbe); she is one of the 14 Holy Helpers and protectress against thunderstorms, lightning, fire and impenitence; above all she is invoked against sudden death; thus she is one of the most popular saints of Christendom. Her alleged relics were transferred by Emperor Justin to Constantinople, from there to Venice, and, in 1009, to Torcelli, near Venice; they are now at Buriano. The Russians venerate the body of S. Barbara in S. Michael's monastery at Kiev. Other relics of hers are found in other places. Meta-phrastes makes Heliopolis in Egypt the site of her martyrdom; the Old Rom. Mart. Tuscia; other sources Nicomedia, Rome, Antioch or Heliopolis in Syria. F. 4 Dec. Rom. Barlaam and Josaphat; a celebrated Christian romance of the Middle Ages, of the Indian prince Josaphat, who was converted by the hermit Barlaam and left his kingdom to lead the life of an anchorite. Josaphat is Buddha. The story is an adaptation of the life of Buddha and other Buddhist legends to Christian ideas. The present Greek text originated at the monastery of S. Sabas near Jerusalem, in the 7th cent. and was edited by S. John Damascene, who was, no doubt, thoroughly deceived in the matter. F. Rom. Mart. 27 Nov. (inserted by Baronius); these two "saints" are products of fancy, though there are hagiologists who believe that Josaphat and Barlaam are real personages who lived somewhere in the Orient, and into whose story the legendary doings of Buddha were inserted. Barnabas, Apostle; the prince of the 72 disciples of Our Lord. B. in Cyprus of Jewish parents; he is the Levite Josias, called by the Apostles "Barnabas," a cousin of S. Mark (Coloss. IV, 10), prophet (Acts XIII, 1,) and apostle (Acts XXIV, 14) in the same sense as S. Paul. He brought to the Apostles the sum realized by the sale of his property (Acts IV, 36), was introduced to S. Paul (Acts IX, 27; Gal. I, 18); sent to Antioch by the Apostles (Acts XI, 22 ss.), he accompanied S. Paul to Cyprus and to the cities of Asia; at Lystra he was thought to be Jupiter, on account of his majestic appearance (Acts XIV, 11 ss.). During the second journey he left S. Paul and went to Cyprus. The Syrian tradition claims that he preached in Isauria and died on the isle of Samos. The Greeks believe that he preached the gospel at Rome and died a martyr at Salamis on Cyprus. He was stoned to death by Jews exasperated at the success of his apostolate. That he evangelized Milan, Bergamo, and Brescia is a tradition of the 8th century. His body was found near Salamis, in 482, with a copy of the gospel of S. Matthew. Tertullian erroneously ascribes to him the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews. The so-called Epistle of S. Barnabas is composed by some Jewish Christian chiliast end of 1st century (found in 1862). F. 11 June by all the Churches. He is the principal patron of Cyprus. At Milan his feast is solemn, because he is considered the first bishop of Milan (2 cl. in territory of Milan). At S. Sernin, Toulouse 27 May Tr. rel. sem. Bartholomew, one of the twelve Apostles, mentioned sixth in order in the three lists. Since Bartholomew (son of Talmai) is not the proper name of the Apostle, many scholars identify him with Nathanael, the "Israelite without guile," who was introduced to Christ by Philip. The missionary activity of Bartholomew, according to later legends, was directed to India (Arabia Felix?), Mesopotamia, Parthia, and Lycaonia. The Syrian and Armenian tradition claims that he preached in Armenia, and was crucified, or flayed, or both, at Albanopolis (Urbanopolis), by command of King Astarages (Herastion, Hirstani). His relics, in 508, were brought to Anastasiopolis in Phrygia; from there, in the 7th century, to the isle of Lipari (north of Sicily); in 839, for fear of the Saracens, to Benevento; part of these relics, in 983, were transferred to Rome (Isle of the Tiber). The Greeks and Syrians keep his feast 11 June, with that of S. Barnabas; the translation of his relics (to Anastasiopolis) 25 Aug. * Basil, C.; b. in the Herzegovina; he was bishop of Zacholmia and Skenderia in the Herzegovina, in the 16th century. His relics are at Ostrog in Montenegro. F. 29 Apr. in Montenegro. Mrt.—Mz.

Basil, C., husband of S. Emelia and father of S. Basil the Great, S. Gregory of Nyssa, S. Peter of Sebaste, and S. Macrina; he was a native of Cappadocia, a lawyer of repute; with his family, during the Diocletian persecution, he had retired to a mountain wilderness in Pontus, but when peace was restored, he returned to his native city, Caesarea in Cappadocia, and lived to a great age. D. about 330. F. 30 May Rom. Mart. On 30 May the Latin and Greek Basilians celebrate the feast of all the relatives of S. Basil. H. L.

Basil the Great, Bp. of Caesarea, C. and Doctor of the Church. B. at Caesarea in Cappadocia, about 329, of highly respected and pious parents, Ss. Basil and Emelia, a brother of Ss. Gregory of Nyssa, Peter of Sebaste, and Macrina. When a child he was left to the care of his grandmother, Macrina; he continued his studies at Caesarea, Constantinople, and Athens, where, in 335, he met, in the same school, Julian, afterwards the apostate Emperor, and S. Gregory of Nazianzus, with whom he contracted an austere and impassionate friendship. Having left Athens he taught rhetoric at Caesarea until his sister, S. Macrina, initiated him into the philosophy of Christian asceticism. (He was baptized and, in 357, went in search of the saints in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria, to acquaint himself with monasticism and to study the duties of his new mode of life.) At the age of 26 he retired into his paternal domain on the river Iris, in Pontus, to give together with S. Gregory, study, especially the writings of Origen. Here he by degrees composed a rule which unites the community life with that of the hermits and by which he became the father of Greek monasticism. Sometimes he appeared in public to defend orthodoxy, e.g., at Constantinople in 359. Having been ordained priest by Archbishop Eusebius of Caesarea (364) and sent out to preach, the jealousy of the Archbishop caused him to return to his solitude. But when Emperor Valens exerted all his power to crush Catholicism, Basil returned to Caesarea and organized the faithful against the heretics. During a famine, in 368, he gave his entire maternal inheritance to the starving. In 370, elected to succeed Eusebius, he thwarted all the efforts of the procurator Modestus and the Emperor Valens to introduce Arianism in Cappadocia. He promoted unity amongst the bishops, tried to compose the Meletian schism, framed, in substance at least, the liturgy which bears his name, and founded a hospital, a new city, before the gates of Caesarea. He is famous for his defence before the Emperor Constantius of the Catholic faith and particularly of the expression "Consubstantial with the Father" in the Nicene Creed. S. Gregory of Nazianzus allots to him first place among commentators on the Bible and the great scholar Erasmus of Rotterdam declares S. Basil to have been the finest orator of all times. D. at Caesarea, 1 Jan. 379. F. in the Greek Ch. 1 Jan., full office (with the Circumcision); another F. with Ss. Gregory (Naz.) and John Chrys. (the three hierarchs) 30 Jan., full and solemn office. In the Latin Church, 14 June (day of his ordination) dp. His name is daily mentioned in the Greek, Syrian, and Ethiopian liturgies. The Latin Basilians keep his feast, 14 June, his Deposition, Jan. 3. Im. Ord. I 121.—L. S.—W.W.—C. E.—Dand. VI 11.—Rams.—Dict.

Beatus, C., Apostle of Switzerland. According to a tradition not older than the 15th century, propagated particularly by Bl. Peter Canisius, he was "baptized in England by the Apostle Barnabas, ordained at Rome by S. Peter and sent to Switzerland"; he is said to have lived and died in his cave (Beatenberg) on the lake of Thun, about 112. Nothing definite is known of him. He may have lived during the Roman dominion, or he may have been an Irish monk who came to Switzerland with S. Columban and retired to the solitude of the cave above the lake. Traits from the life of S. Beatus of Vendôme have been transferred to him, but the two are not identical. The Zwinglians of Berne closed the cave and put a stop to the pilgrimages, but the cult of S. Beatus was transferred from the deserted cave to a chapel at Lungern in Obwalden. F. 9 May (originally 17 or 19 Oct.) at Berne. H. L.—W.W.—A. B. 24, 423.—H. D.

In point of scholarship he undoubtedly was the most learned man of his age. His works comprise all the knowledge of his time: Grammar, Rhetoric, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Music, Poetry, Hagiography, Homiletics, Commentaries on Holy Writ (allegorical explanation), which he conscientiously compiled from the Greek and Latin Fathers. He is called the Father of English historiography (Historia Ecclesiae Gentis Anglorum, 5 vols., from Cæsar to 731.) D. 26 May, 735, on Ascension eve. His relics were elevated at Jarrow 29 Oct. Like all the other saints of this period, he was canonized by popular veneration, tacitly approved by the Church. Many pilgrims came to visit his tomb at Jarrow. His relics were stolen in the 11th century and carried to Durham, where they were placed with those of S. Cuthbert. They were an object of veneration to the faithful up to the general profanation by Henry VIII, who pulled down the shrine and buried the bones of Bede with those of all the other saints of Northumbria. The title "Venerabilis" was not given to him during his lifetime, as Trithemius supposes, but in the 9th century by Amalarius and others and by the synod of Aix-la-Chapelle in 953. A local cult was maintained early in the northern province of York, but not in the South, where the Sarum rite was used. F. formerly in England a simple commemoration on 26

May, the feast of S. Augustine, or on 27 May, at Ely (1498) 13 March; later on in all England 29 Oct., by the Benedictines 27 May. 13 May, 1899 his F. with the title of a Doctor of the Church was extended to the universal Latin Church 27 May dp. L. S.—St.—W.W.—C. E.—Biogr.—Angl.

Benedict Biscop, abbot, C., a worthy rival of the great patriarch of the monks; b. c. 628 of the highest Anglo-Saxon nobility of Northumbria; he spent his youth in the service of King Oswy of Northumbria. In 653, with S. Wilfrid, he made the first of his five pilgrimages to Rome; on his return to England he introduced the Roman rite instead of the Celtic usages observed in the North of England by the Irish missionaries from Iona. During his second journey he took the habit at Lérins, France, in 666, and in 668, he and S. Adrian conducted S. Theodore, the newly elected Archbishop of Canterbury, to England. Shortly after their arrival S. Theodore appointed him abbot of S. Peter, Canterbury; after his third pilgrimage King Egbert of Northumbria assisted him to found S. Peter's monastery at Wearmouth, about 675; after his fourth journey he built S. Paul's at Jarrow, in 682. On his journeys he obtained many books and objects of art; he also engaged John, the arch-chantor of S. Peter's at Rome, to teach the Roman chant in his monasteries. He was the first to introduce into England the erection of stone churches and the art of making glass windows. In 700 he was stricken with a cruel disease, which lasted for three years and paralyzed all his members, one after another; he died 12 Jan., 690, at Wearmouth Abbey, where his relics were venerated up to the Reformation. F. 12 Jan. dp. 1 cl. oct., Patron of the English Benedictines.—L. S.—St.—Angl. Biogr.

Benedict of Aniane (Witiza), abbot, O. S. B., the "reviver of monastic discipline, the second father of monasticism in the West"; b. about 750, son of Count Aigulf of Maguelone in Southern France; he was educated for the military career at the court of Pepin of Landen and took part in the campaign to Lombardy; but, in 773, he left the world and became a monk at S. Seine near Dijon. In 780 he retired to a hermitage on his own estate in Languedoc; here, in a gorge of the stream Aniane, he built a cell, later the great monastery of Saint-Sauveur, under an austere rule, which became the center of reform for many monasteries in Gaul and Germany. Later on he passed to the neighborhood of Aix-la-Chapelle, where, on the banks of the river Inde, the Emperor Louis le Debonnaire built for him the great abbey known as Cornelimünster. He attended the synods of Arles (813) and Aix-la-Chapelle (817), over the latter of which he presided. He was eminently active for the framing of the "Capitulare Monasticum" at the synod of Aix-la-Chapelle, 10 July, 817. He is the author of the "Concordantia Regularum" and of a treatise against the Adoptianist Felix of Urgel. D. at Cornelimünster, 11 Feb., 821. Benedict Crispus, Archbp. of Milan, C.; he built a monastery inside the New Gate and died, in 735, after an administration of about 45 years. F. 11 March Rom. Mart., now at Milan solemn 6 Sept. He was a strenuous defender of his episcopal rights. P. B.—H. L.

Benedict of Nursia, C., the Patriarch of the Western Monks. B. at Nursia (Norcia) in Umbria (Central Italy) of the rich and noble family of the Anicii, at a time when confusion, corruption, despair, and death reigned everywhere and social dismemberment seemed complete. He spent his boyhood at Rome; at the age of seventeen he fled from the immoral surroundings of the city to the solitude of Enfide (Affile) in the Sabine mountains, then to a cave in the wild mountain rift of Subiaco, where, clothed with the religious habit, fed and instructed by S. Romanus, a solitary of the vicinity, he led the life of an anchorite. After three years of solitude he was elected superior of Vicovaro monastery, but having failed to reform the monks, who tried to poison him, he returned to Subiaco and founded twelve monasteries, in each of which he placed twelve monks. Clergy and laity, Romans and barbarians, victors and vanquished flocked to him, attracted by the fame of his virtues and miracles. To escape from persecution, in 529, he left Subiaco and settled at Monte Cassino, upon the boundaries of Samnium and Campania, on the river Liris. There he extirpated the cult of Apollo and built a cell for himself and his monks, an event which formed a landmark in the history of religious life and the regeneration of Europe. He drew to himself many disciples by his mild, paternal rule, by the wisdom and discretion of his doctrine, by the sanctity of his life, and his gift of working miracles. S. Gregory mentions also, a convent of nuns, at the foot of the mountain, presided over by the saint's sister, S. Scholastica. King Totila's visit to Monte Cassino, in 543, is the only certain date we have in the saint's life. It must have occurred when Benedict was advanced in years, for the saint's death is put in the same year, 21 March, 543. He died, standing in front of the altar, immediately after the reception of Holy Communion. His relics were venerated at Monte Cassino with those of his sister Scholastica, but are said to have been brought to Fleury-sur-Loire, in 653, after the destruction of the monastery of Monte Cassino by the Lombards. A portion was sent back to Monte Cassino, about 756, by order of Pope Zachary. The monks of Monte Cassino, however, deny that the relics were ever transferred to France. Benedict's Life was written by S. Gregory the Great from oral contemporary testimony. His name was in the Canon of the Gallo-Roman Mass. F. 21 March dp. maj. in the Latin Church, 14 March by the Greek and daughter churches. The great Benedictine family keeps his feast as a dp. 1 cl.; he is also principal patron of Norcia. The feast of 11 July was originally the F. of the translation of his relics, dp. maj. at Orleans. But the Cassinenses called this F. "Commemoration of S. Benedict," which term, in 1915, was adopted by the entire Benedictine Order. dp. 1 cl. oct. F. of his Patronage: 2nd Sunday of July O. S. Benedict, a monk in Campania (exact place unknown), of whom S. Gregory (Dial., II, 18) relates that the Goths under Totila threw him into a furnace, but the fire did not injure him; d. in peace about 543. F. 23 March, Rom. Mart. He may be identical with the former saint. H. L.

Benedict the Moor (Negro), of S. Filadelfo (San Fradello), C., O. F. M.; b. at San Fradello, diocese of Messina, Sicily, in 1526, of Nubian parents, who were slaves of the Manasseri family. He was freed by his master when still very young and joined a newly formed association of hermits on Monte Pellegrino near Palermo, under the rule of S. Francis, of which he was superior for 22 years. When Pope Pius IV dissolved this community, Benedict joined the reformed Recollects of the Franciscan Order at Palermo. Although he was only a lay-brother and a negro, he was elected guardian of S. M. de Gesù at Palermo. He reformed the monastery and ruled it with great success until his death, 4 Apr., 1589. Beatified in 1743; canonized 24 May, 1807. F. 3 Apr. Rom. Mart., dp. maj. O. F. M. and in the African Missions at Patti and Palermo 4 March. Rams.—Seeb. 101.—L. S.—H. L.

Benedict of the Bridge (Benet, Benezet); b. about 1160, at Hermillon, Savoy, or at Villard, Ardennes. It is related that he received instructions from an angel to construct a stone bridge over the Rhone at Avignon (1177–1188). The "Bridge Brothers," consisting of knights, priests, and laborers (approved in 1189) considered him their founder. D. in 1184. F. 14 Apr. dp. at Viviers; 13 Sept. Benedict Joseph Labre, C., the "Holy Tramp"; b. 26 March, 1748, at Amettes, diocese of Boulogne, France; after unsuccessful studies and fruitless attempts to obtain the habit in the Carthusian Order at Val-Sainte-Aldegonde and Neuville (1767), at La-Trappe and at the Cistercian monastery of Sept-Fonts (1769), he resolved to lead the life of a wandering pilgrim in perfect poverty; he visited all the great sanctuaries of France, Italy, Spain, Germany, and Switzerland. He everywhere begged his food only, refusing money. At Rome he was called "the Saint of the Forty Hours' Devotion," because he went from church to church following the "Quarant' Ore." Subjecting himself to extreme privations in sleep, food and dress, he led a life of continual prayer and heroic mortification. D. at Rome 16 Apr. 1783. His funeral cortège resembled a triumphal procession and up to our own time his shrine in the church of S. Maria dei Monti is one of the most frequented in Rome. Beatified in 1860; canonized in 1881. F. 16 Apr. by the Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament; by O. F. M. simpl.—Seeb. 501.—P. B.—Psych. 77.

Benedict XI, O. P., C., Pope, 22 Oct. 1303–1304. His secular name was Nicolò Boccasini; b. at Treviso, in 1240. He was elected general of the Dominicans, in 1296, and created Cardinal Bishop of Ostia in 1298. Being a man of first-rate ability and well versed in the learning of his age, he was employed by Pope Boniface VIII as his nuncio in Engand, France, Hungary, Poland, Austria, Denmark, Servia, and other countries. Everywhere he commanded respect and acquired fame and veneration from princes and people alike, on account of his simple piety and spirit of self-sacrifice. After his elevation to the papacy he tried to smooth the angry waves raised during the pontificate of Boniface VIII; he recalled the Colonna from exile, restoring their dignities and possessions, absolved King Philip IV of France from excommunication, and annulled most of the decrees directed against France. In 1304, he received the profession of faith of the Nestorian patriarch Jabballah III. D. at Perugia, 7 July, 1304. F. 7 July dp. maj. at Treviso; dp. at Rome, Padua, Perugia and O. P.—W.W.—C. E.—A. Benignus, M., Patron of Dijon, Apostle of Burgundy. Tradition has it that he was b. at Smyrna in Asia Minor and was a disciple of S. Polycarp. His "Passion," however, is absolutely worthless; it was fabricated shortly after S. Gregory of Langres, by a vision, had gained the conviction that a certain sarcophagus contained his relics; he is in no way connected either with S. Polycarp or with the cycle of the Triplets: Speusippus, Eleusippus, and Melasippus. Nothing definite is known of him. He was probably an Italian or a Gallo-Roman who planted the faith at Autun and at Langres, making Dijon the centre of his activity. Probably he was martyred after 270, under Aurelian. Over his sepulchre were built the basilica and monastery of S. Benigne, c. 535. His sarcophagus was found again in 1858. Benno, C., Bp. of Meissen, Saxony; b. at Hildesheim, about 1010, son of the count of Waldenberg (Bultenburg) near Goslar. Educated by S. Bernard, he became a monk and abbot of S. Michael's, Hildesheim; he surrendered the abbacy and was appointed master of the canons of Goslar. There he remained 17 years and made the acquaintance of S. Anno, later Archbishop of Cologne. When Anno became regent of the Empire, he gave to Benno the bishopric of Meissen and Benno was consecrated (1066) at Magdeburg. He worked among the Wendish people of his diocese and converted great numbers of them from paganism to the Church. When the Saxon chiefs revolted against Henry IV and were defeated at Langensalza, the Emperor expelled Benno from his see, 1075-1076. Not long after that he was summoned to Worms to a synod convened by Henry IV in opposition to Pope Gregory VII. The synod had the temerity to depose the Pope. Benno escaped from Worms and hastened to Rome; he, almost alone among the German bishops, attended S. Gregory's Council (Lent 1076) which condemned Henry's usurpation of the Church's rights, and excommunicated him. When Henry's power crumbled away under the sentence of the Pope, Benno returned to Germany and gave all his efforts to the evangelization of the Wends. D. 16 June, 1106. He was canonized, 31 May, 1523; since Meissen was menaced by the Lutherans (it was secularized in 1581); the body of S. Benno in 1576 was brought to Munich, where he was elected patron of the city. Bernard of Clairvaux, abbot and Doctor of the Church. B. about 1091, of a noble Burgundian family at Castle Fontaines, near Dijon; piously educated by his mother Aleth and at the school of Chatillon, he (1113) left a soldier's career and with 30 noblemen (amongst them his father, Tesselin, four brothers, and an uncle) entered the reformed monastery of Cîteaux under S. Stephen Harding. In 1115, he was sent with 12 monks to found Clairvaux. By his enthusiasm and his love of God, by the purity, strength and mildness of his personality, he drew to himself men from all walks of life in great numbers and raised them to such a degree of monastic perfection that from Clairvaux he could found 68 monasteries of the Cistercian reform, eclipsing thereby the glory of Cluny. He thus became the second founder of the austere Cistercian Order, of which the Trappists (Reformed Cistercians) are now the best known branch. He was drawn into a controversy with Abbot Peter the Venerable of Cluny, in consequence of the rivalry between the White Monks (Cistercians) and the Black Monks (Cluniacenses). He strenuously fought against the errors of Abélard and Gilbert de la Porée, also against the neo-Manichean teachings of Arnold of Brescia. He effected the acknowledgement of Pope Innocent II by the rulers of France, England, and Germany. In many journeys he preached the second Crusade (1133–1137) and by his letters spread enthusiasm all over Europe. Having for forty years directed the political and ecclesiastical fate of Europe, after many corporal sufferings and bitter disappointments, he died at Clairvaux, 20 Aug., 1153. He was canonized, 18 Jan., 1174, and declared a Doctor of the Church, in 1830. He is called "Doctor Mellifluus" on account of the tenderness which pervades his numerous writings. He is the founder of the mysticism of the Middle Ages; from him theologians, preachers, and ascetical writers have drawn since the 13th century. His relics were elevated at Clairvaux 14 Nov., 1174. In 1790 they were brought to Ville-sous-la-Ferte; the skull is in the cathedral of Troyes. F. 20 Aug. Rom. Mart.,

Bernardinus degl' Albizzeschi, of Siena, C., O. F. M., the Apostle of Italy. B. at Massa Maritima, 8 Sept., 1380. Having served those stricken by pestilence at Siena, he took the habit of S. Francis at Siena, 8

Sept., 1402, but soon withdrew to the convent of Colombaio, outside the city. He was ordained priest, 8 Sept., 1404. For 12 years he lived in retirement at Capriola. After 1417, when his gift of eloquence was made manifest, he visited the cities of Italy, preaching penance and propagating devotion to the Holy Name of Jesus (I. H. S.). His labors for religion tended at the same time to allay partisan quarrels and to extend the Order of the Friars Minor. He was appointed vicar general of the Order in Italy (1438-1442); his disciple, S. John of Capistrano, assisted him in promoting the strict observance. He is accounted the foremost Italian missionary of the 15th century, the greatest preacher of his day, the Apostle of the Holy Name and the restorer of the Order of the Friars Minor. He is famous also for his devotion to Our Blessed Lady, the feast of whose nativity was the date of his own birth, of his religious profession, of his first Mass and of his first sermon. D. at Aquila, 20 May, 1444. Canonized, 24 May, 1450. His relics are in the Franciscan Church at Aquila; they were elevated, 18 May, 1472, and rediscovered by French soldiers, in 1799. Bibiana, V., M., at Rome. She was martyred under prefect Apronianus (363?); her parents Flavianus and Dafrosa and her sister Demetria also gave up their lives for Christ. Her acts are wholly untrustworthy. Her martyrdom, under Julian, seems impossible; either these saints suffered in an earlier persecution, or their acts are pure romance. A long account is given of her sufferings in a composition much esteemed in the Middle Ages, but which cannot stand the test of scientific criticism. Her name, with the fact and the place of her martyrdom, are all that can be asserted with certainty. Her fame has been widespread from early ages. Pope Simplicius, in 467, built a small basilica in honor of S. Bibiana on the Esquiline, to which Leo II brought the relics of Ss. Simplicius, Faustinus, and Viatrix. F. 2 Dec. Rom. Birgitta (Bridget) of Sweden, matron, the most celebrated saint of the Northern kingdoms. B. about 1303 at Finstad, near Upsala; daughter of the noble Birger, governor of Upland. From her seventh year she had visions of Christ crucified. In 1316, she was married to Ulf Gudmarsson, to whom she bore eight children, amongst them S. Catherine of Sweden. Between 1341 and 1343 she made a pilgrimage to Compostella; on the return journey, Ulf fell ill and died (46 years old) at the Cistercian abbey of Alvastra, in 1344. Now Birgitta devoted herself to works of penance; visions grew more frequent, Christ declared her His bride. About this time, at Wadstena, she founded a convent for 60 nuns and a separate house for 13 priests, four deacons, and eight lay brothers (13 priests = 12 Apostles and S. Paul, 60, 4, 8 = 72 disciples) in honor of the Holy Redeemer (Order approved about 1370). Her Revelations she wrote and dictated in Swedish (original lost); her confessors translated them into Latin. From 1350 she lived in Rome, where she founded a hospice for Swedish students and pilgrims. She pathetically admonished the Pope to return to Rome from Avignon, but was not successful before 1367 (Urban V). The cutting reproofs of princes, kings and popes made by her proceeded from the conviction that she was the instrument selected by God for the moral and religious revival of her age. D. at Rome, 23 July. 1373. Her body was brought to Wadstena, in 1374. She was canonized by Boniface IX, 7 Oct., 1391. F. in the Latin Church, 8 Oct. dp. (in 1623: 7 Oct.; by Urban VIII, 8 Oct.). Blasius (Blase, Blaise), Bp., M., one of the 14 Holy Helpers. He had been a physician in the city of Sebaste in Cappadocia, of which he became bishop. During the persecution under Diocletian he hid on a mountain near the city, but was captured and imprisoned. Since, according to the legendary life, he cured a boy who was choking from a fishbone he had swallowed, he is patron against all diseases of the throat. The Blessing of S. Blaise is given with two candles, which are held against the throat in the form of a S. Andrew's cross. After enduring many tortures (laceration with iron combs), Blase suffered martyrdom, perhaps under Licinius, in 320. Seven holy women and three children suffered at the same time. His acts are untrustworthy. He is one of the most highly venerated martyrs of the Church. The Crusaders propagated his cult in Europe. A synod of Oxford, in 1222, prohibited servile work on his feast. He has been confounded with other saints of the same name. Relics of S. Blaise are venerated at Orbitelli, St. Blasien (Black Forest), Ragusa, Paris, etc. All particulars concerning his life and martyrdom are purely legendary.

He is patron of physicians, of wax chandlers, and against all diseases of the throat. He is also patron, principal or minor, of many towns and dioceses, especially in Italy. F. 3 Feb. Rom. Bonajuncta Manetti (Giovanni di Buona-giunta), C., one of the seven founders of the Servite Order; he was a Florentine merchant; when he had retired with his companions to Mt. Senario, he collected alms for the community. In 1249, he was appointed first superior of the colony at Cafaggio and 23 May; 1256, after the resignation of S. Buonfiglio, became second General of the Order; d. at Mt. Senario, 31 Aug., 1257. F. 31 Aug. Rom. Mart. v. Seven Founders. Serv. 66.—H. L.

Bonaventure of Meaco, M., 3rd O. F. M.; b. at Meaco and baptized when a child; after the death of his parents he visited the school of the pagan bonzes; later on, when converted, he served the Franciscans as catechist. He was crucified at Nagasaki, 5 Feb., 1597; v. S. Peter Bapt. F. 5 Feb. Jap.

Bonaventure, Bp., C., Doctor Seraphicus, Minister General O. F. M. and Cardinal Bp. of Albano; b. in 1221 at Bagnorea, in Tuscany; at the age of 4 he was suddenly cured of sickness by the prayers of S. Francis; he entered the Order, finished his studies under Alexander of Hales, at Paris, and taught there until 1255, during the turbulent quarrels between the University and the Mendicant Orders. Proposed for the generalship by B. John of Parma, he was elected 2 Feb., 1257, only 36 years of age. This office was of peculiar difficulty, owing to the fact that the Order was distracted by internal dissensions between the Spirituales and the Relaxati. He governed the Order till 1273, when he was created Cardinal Bishop of Albano by Gregory X, 3 June, 1273; 24 Nov., 1265, he had been appointed archbishop of York, but refused to accept. During his generalship he perfected the Constitution and organization of his Order, defined the limits of provinces, raised the standard of studies, and successfully guided the Order through great dangers and difficulties; he is called the "Second Founder of the Friars Minor." He was charged with the preparatory labors for the Council of Lyons, but died before the end of the Council, at Lyons, 13 July, 1274. His relics were elevated 14 March, 1434; he was canonized 14 Apr., 1482, by Sixtus IV and declared a Doctor of the Church 14 March, 1587. Bonaventure was a holy friar, a prudent superior, a celebrated orator, apart from S. Thomas the greatest scholastic theologian and "Prince of Mystics" (Leo XIII). S. Thomas is the teacher of theory, of the school, Bonaventure the teacher of practical life; Thomas illuminates the understanding, Bonaventure warms the heart; Thomas is an analyst, Bonaventure a synthesist; Thomas is the Christian Aristotle, Bonaventure the faithful disciple of S. Augustine. Besides noble commentaries on Holy Scripture and on the work of the Master of Sentences (the theological and philosophical text-book in use in his age), we have from the pen of Bonaventure many ascetical and mystical treatises and a touchingly beautiful Life of S. Francis, the founder of his Order. His relics were burnt at Lyons, in 1560. F. in the universal Latin church, 14 July dp. Bonaventure of Peraga (B.), M., Erem. S. A.; b. 22 June, 1332, at Peraga, near Padua, where he joined the Augustinians; he finished his studies at Paris; 17 May, 1377, at Verona, he was elected General of the Order; 18 Sept., 1378, created Cardinal-priest of S. Caecilia; during the schism he often acted in the quality of ambassador; at the instigation of the prince of Carrara, his relative, he was killed by an arrow, at Rome, 10 July, 1388. H. L.

Bonaventure of Barcelona (B.), C., O. F. M.; b. 24 Nov., 1620, at Riudoms, near Barcelona, Spain; he married when quite young, but after his wife's death took the Franciscan habit at Escornalbon; to escape notoriety for his mystical gifts, he went to Rome and was made doorkeeper at S. Isidoro. He founded the first retreat convent at S. M. delle Grazie, Ponticelli in Sabina, in 1675; another on the Palatine Hill, called S. Bonaventura. He was highly esteemed by Popes and Cardinals. D. 11 Sept., 1684. Cult approved 21 May, 1906. F. 11 Sept. dp. O. F. M. at Barcelona and Taragona. Off. pr.

Bonaventure of Potenza (B.), C., O. Conv.; b. at Potenza in Lucania, Italy; after he had taken the habit of S. Francis in his native city, he was sent to Amalfi, where he devoted himself to the care of souls; often he spent the whole night before the Blessed Sacrament; later on he was sent to Ischia, then to Naples; d. at Ravello, 26 Oct., 1711. Bonñlius (dei Buonfigli) Monaldi, of Florence, C., first founder of the Servites (v. Seven Founders). B. at Florence, in 1176. On 15 Aug., 1233, in consequence of a vision at the cathedral, he conceived the idea of withdrawing from the world. With six noblemen he retired to the hermitage of Camarzia, 8 Sept., after nine months to Monte Senario, where, for five years, they lived in caves. In April, 1240, the archbishop of Florence gave them a common habit, which, according to the Servite tradition, was shown to them by the B. V. Mary, 13 Apr., 1240. By order of Buonfiglio the celebrated image of the Annunciation was painted by Bartolomeo at Florence, in 1255. D. on Mt. Senario, 1 Jan., 1262. Cult approved 20 Nov., 1717. Canonized 15 Jan., 1888. F. 12 Feb. dp. in the Latin Church; commem. 1. Jan. O. S.—Serv., I 21.

Bonñlius, C., Bp. of Foligno; b. at Osimo, Italy, in 1040; he took the habit of S. Benedict at S. M. de Storaco; in 1070, he was elected abbot; in 1078 bishop of Foligno. After a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, in 1096, he resigned and retired to his monastery, from there to the solitude of S. M. della Fara, diocese of Cingoli. D. 27 Sept., 1115. His relics were brought to the church of the Silvestrines at Cingoli in 1681. F. at Cingoli (minor patron) 28 Jan. dp. maj. Boniface, M., at Tarsus. He was the steward of Aglae, a rich Roman lady, with whom he lived on terms of undue familiarity. When Aglae heard of the power of the relics of martyrs, she sent Boniface to obtain some of them. He came to Tarsus, and, seeing some Christians being tortured, ran up to them and besought them to pray for him, a miserable sinner. Whereupon he was subjected to the most excruciating tortures and, more dead than alive, decapitated, 14 May, 306. His slaves brought the body to Aglae, who buried him on the Latin Way, 5 June. He is patron of the church of Ss. Bonifacio and Alessio at Rome. Probably his story is fictitious; he was unknown before the 9th century. F. 14 May simpl. in the Latin Church. Rom. Mart. Boniface IV., C., Pope, 25 Sept., 608–615. B. at Valeria in the province of Marsi; he was a disciple of S. Gregory and a Benedictine monk at S. Sebastiano, Rome. To him Emperor Phocas donated the Pantheon (built by Marcus Agrippa as the temple of all the heathen gods of the Roman Empire) which Boniface consecrated to Our Lady and all the holy Martyrs, 13 May, 609,—the first instance, at Rome, of the transformation of a pagan temple into a place of Christian worship. At a synod, in February, 610, he and Archbishop Mellitus organized the Church of England. During his pontificate there was much distress in Rome, owing to famine, pestilence and inundations; Jerusalem was taken by the Persians, in 614. D. 25 May, 615. His relics, since 1603, are in new S. Peter's. F. at Rome dp. 1 June. Rom. Mart. 25 May in the diocese of Marsi.—L. S.—C. E.—Biogr.—Rams.

Boniface (Bonifatius), Bp. M., O. S. B., Apostle of Germany. B. in 675, of noble Anglo-Saxon parents in Devonshire (Crediton?) and educated at Exeter; he took the Benedictine habit at Nutselle near Winchester; there he probably adopted the name "Bonifatius"; his Saxon name had been "Winfrid." For a time he directed the school of Nutselle. A strong desire to preach the gospel to pagans led him, with some companions, to Frisia, in spring 716; since, however, King Radbod was in conflict with Charles Martel, Boniface returned to England in fall. Having declined the dignity of abbot, he went to Rome, in 718, to have his vocation confirmed; Gregory II, in 719, sent him to Thuringia. After the death of the Christ-hating King Radbod, he returned to Frisia; he found S. Willibrord in the missionary field there, and (722) undertook the evangelization of Upper Hessa. Summoned to Rome by Gregory II, he was consecrated bishop, 30 Nov., 722, and commissioned to spread and organize the Church in Hessa, Thuringia, and pagan Saxony. After a visit to Charles Martel (723) to obtain safe conduct, he successfully worked in Lower Hessa and Thuringia, where some Celtic priests caused him great annoyance. One of his achievements in Hessa was the felling of an enormous oak at Fritzlar, near Geismar, hallowed for ages to Thor, the Thunderer, the centre of the idolatrous worship of the natives. The shuddering pagans at once bowed before the superior might of Christianity. Out of the wood Boniface built a chapel in honor of S. Peter. Now he turned to his native land for a supply of missionaries: Lul, Burchard, Witta, Willibald and Wunibald, Lioba, Walburga, Thecla, Chunihild and Beratgith etc. came to teach and to found monasteries. In 732 he was given the title of Archbishop and Apostolic Delegate; 738–739 he made three journeys to Rome. He organized the Church in Bavaria, founding the bishoprics of Passau, Ratisbon, Salzburg, Freising, Eichstädt, and Neuburg; next he organized Thuringia and Hessa by erecting the sees of Würzburg, Erfurt, and Buraburg. Then he held reform synods in France and, after the death of Charles Martel (741), was nominated Archbishop of Austrasia (742); in 743 he anointed Pepin and consecrated archbishops for Reims, Sens, and Rouen in Neustria. After the Frankish synod of 743, he took up his residence at Mayence; all his organizatory measures were approved by a synod of the realm, in 747. In 752, he resigned in favor of S. Lul, obtained from Pepin and Pope Stephen III the missionary district of Utrecht, and began to preach on the eastern coast of Zuider Sea, 5 June, 754, he was killed by pagans near Dockum, with 52 companions. These were S. Eoban, Bp. of Utrecht; the three priests Wintrun, Walther, and Adalar; the deacons Hamund, Seirbald and Bosa; the monks Waccar, Gundecar, Elleher and Hadewulf; the servant Hildebrand and 40 Frisian converts. The body of S. Boniface was brought to Mayence and Fulda (July, 755); his tomb is in the crypt of the cathedral at Fulda. F. in the Latin Church (Rom. Mart.) 5 June dp. By a synod at Canterbury the feast was instituted for England in 756 and soon after in many churches of Gaul and Germany. Boniface and comp., Mm. He was a deacon, martyred at Carthage, Africa, in the time of Hunneric, the Arian King of the Vandals (477–488). His fellow sufferers were S. Liberatus, an abbot, Servus and Austicus, subdeacons, Rogatus and Septimus, monks, and Maximus, a boy, all members of community of monks established at Capsa, near Tunis. After having undergone cruel tortures, they were scourged to death. (v. S. Liberatus.) F. 17 Aug. Rams.

Boniface I. C., Pope, 29 Dec., 418-422. After the death of S. Zosimus, a faction of the electors, consisting chiefly of deacons, chose the archdeacon Eulalius; next day the higher clergy elected Boniface. Emperor Honorius first approved of Eulalius, but after two synods held at Ravenna he decided in favor of Boniface and issued a decree, that after a doubtful election the Roman clergy should vote a second time. S. Boniface firmly resisted Pelagianism and by conciliatory measures put an end to the dispute about the metropolitan dignity in the South of France. Illyria, which Theodosius II had given to the patriarchate of Constantinople, was restored to Rome. He enforced the law forbidding slaves to become priests. Brendan (Brennain McFinlugh), the voyager, abbot and bishop, C.; b. on Fenit peninsula, Kerry, about 483, baptized by S. Erc at Tubber-na-Molt. For 5 years he was educated under S. Itha at Tubrid Beg; he completed his studies under S. Erc, who ordained him, in 512. He built the cells at Ardfert and at Shankeel, at the foot of Brandon Hill. From there he set out for his famous voyage across the sea (22 Feb., "Egressio Familiae S. Brendani, Mart.," of Tallaght). The narrative of the navigation of S. Brendan (11th cent.) seems to be a geographical legend (Bollandists, Humboldt); some, however, claim for S. Brendan the glory of having discovered the American continent. "This celebrated voyage to the West is, by many, not without some evidence, upheld as an historical fact. It certainly cannot lightly be rejected as a mere myth, though it had no immediate results." (Rams). After 5 years he visited S. Gildas at Rhys (Bretagne) and founded cells near Aleth and at Plouaret; then he returned to Ireland, where he visited S. Brigid at Kildare, S. Itha at Killeedy, and S. Enda at Arran; after a second exile, spent with S. Paul at Léon (Bretagne), he founded cells on Inchquin island, Connaught; at Dysart, Killkenny; at Annaghdown for his sister S. Briga, and, in 555, the Great School at Clonfert, over which he set S. Brictius (Briccius, Brice), archbishop of Tours; b. at Tours, son of the count of Névers; he was a disciple of S. Martin at Marmoutiers; at Tours he gave scandal by his pride, ambition, and vices. He was elected to succeed S. Martin for his birth or wealth (or because S. Martin had foretold that Brice would be his successor); as bishop, he showed little improvement, wherefore he was deposed. He retired to Rome, but after a number of years returned to Tours, led the austere life of a saint, and died in 444. His body was transferred to Clermont by S. Gregory of Tours about 580; later on it was brought to S. Michele, Pavia. F. 13 Nov. Rom. Mart., dp. at Tours, dp. maj. (minor patron) at Pavia; 13 May Tr. rel. dp. at Pavia. Brigid (Brigh), V., of Coirpre, or An-naghdown, Galway, Ireland. F. 7 Jan. O'H., I, 96.

Brigid, V., of Kildare, second patroness of Ireland, the "Mary of the Gael." B. about 451, at Faughart, Louth, daughter of Dubhthach, a Leinster chieftain; having received the veil from Maccaille with seven other virgins, and settled for a time at the foot of Croghan Hill, she was professed by S. Mel of Ardagh, who, about 468, conferred abbatial powers on her. Subsequently, in the plains of Maghlife, she erected her famous convent of Kil-dara (church of the Oak), which became a center of piety and learning and developed into a cathedral city. She founded two monastic institutions, one for men, the other for women, and appointed S. Conleth spiritual pastor of them; thus Kildare was ruled by a double line of abbot bishops and abbesses; the abbess of Kildare being regarded as superioress general of all the nunneries which followed the old Celtic rule in Ireland. She is said to have first met S. Patrick at Telltown (Upper Kells, Meath); subsequently there was between them "so great a friendship of charity that they had but one heart and one mind" (Book of Armagh). From the Kildare scriptorium came the wondrous "Book of Kildare," a gorgeously illuminated book of gospels (lost in the 16th century). S. Brigid ranks as the most remarkable Irishwoman of the 5th century. D. at Kildare, 1 Feb., 525; her body was interred in the cathedral. Owing to Scandinavian raids her relics were taken to Downpatrick, in 878, and buried in the tomb of Ss. Patrick and Columbkille. All three bodies were discovered, 9 June, 1185, and solemnly elevated. Her Life is obscured by many legends. Bruno, abbot, founder of the Carthusian Order; b. at Cologne, about 1030, of the Hartefäust family, but educated at Reims; he was ordained at Cologne and given a canonry at S. Cunibert's; called to Reims, in 1057, he was appointed director of the cathedral school and, in 1075, chancellor and canon theologian of the archdiocese. He left Reims on account of a conflict with the worldly bishop Manasses I; after the final deposition of Manasses (1080) and the simoniac installation of his successor, Helinand, Bruno with six companions retired first to Molesmes, then to the solitude of Sèche-Fontaine, diocese of Langres; at last into the more suitable wilderness, near Grenoble, called from the surrounding Carthusian mountains, "La Chartreuse." The legend of his conversion by a deceased canon returning to life is unknown to contemporary writers and was invented 150 years after Bruno's death. On the land given to him by his disciple, S. Hugh of Grenoble, he, in 1084, erected cells, thereby founding the eremitical Order of the Carthusians. Called to Rome, in 1090, by his disciple, Pope Urban II, he reluctantly acted as his confessor and adviser. His monks, under the leadership of Lantuin, returned to the Chartreuse. In 1090, Bruno refused the archbishopric of Reggio (Calabria); when taken into Calabria with the hope of persuading him to accept it, he escaped with some of his companions to the mountain solitude of Torre, diocese of Squillace, and there founded a new settlement (S. Maria dell' Eremo), whilst Pope Urban was in France. Here he was allowed to remain in tranquillity till his death, which took place 6 Oct. 1101. His body is in the church of S. Stephen at Torre. Leo X, in 1514, approved his cult and granted his F. to the Carthusians; Gregory XV, 7 Feb., 1623, extended it to the Latin Church, 6 Oct. dp.; dp. 1 cl. oct. O. Carth., and at Bivongo. Ord. 447.—L. Bruno I, the Great, archbp. of Cologne, youngest son of Emperor Henry I; b. in 925; he was educated at Utrecht and at the court of his brother Otto I; in 940 he was chosen chancellor, in 951 archchancellor of Otto I; in 953 archbishop of Cologne and duke of Lothringia (30 July); during the second journey of Otto to Rome, he and Archbp. William of Mayence were administrators of the empire. He introduced in the monasteries of Cologne and Lothringia the reform of Gorze, raised the standard of the education of the clergy and people, founded schools and made frequent visitations. In Bruno's personality as prince-bishop was represented the perfect union of Church and State, which was the corner-stone of the policy of Otto the Great. D. 11 Oct., 965, at Reims; was buried at S. Pantaleon, Cologne. His tomb was opened 23 Jan., 1892. Cult approved in 1870. F. 11 Oct. dp. at Cologne. Ger.—W.W.—H. L.—H. D.

Burgundofara (Fara), V., foundress and abbess of Farmoutiers, near Meaux; b. at Meaux in 595, daughter of Duke Agneric; her brothers were S. Cagnoald, bishop of Laon, and S. Faro, bishop of Meaux; having been cured of a lingering sickness by the prayers of S. Eustace, abbot, she took the veil from Gonoald, bishop of Meaux, in 614. On account of her having refused to marry, she was cruelly persecuted by her disappointed father. In the end, however, he was reconciled to his daughter and built for her the monastery of Farmoutiers, near Meaux. Influenced by her, her brother, S. Faro, gave himself to God. She gave to her monastery the stern rule of S. Columban. D. 7 Dec., 657. Her relics are at Farmoutiers and Champeaux. She is invoked for sore eyes. F. 3 Apr. Rom. Mart. Cadell ab Urian, 7th cent., a saint from Clamorgan, of the line of Coel, a member of the choir of Codoc, at Llanccarfan, Wales, and founder of Llangacell, also of Sully. F. unknown. B. G., II, 1.

Cadeold = S. Edald.

Cadfael = S. Cadoc, 21. Sept.

Cadfan, C., Grandson of Emyr Llydaw, a prince of Brittany. Cadfan, with a large company, fled to Wales, about 470, during the Frankish invasion or in consequence of some home feud. He founded the monastery on the isle of Bardsey (Bangor Cadfan), which soon became very celebrated; the little island was the Iona of Wales ("Roma Britanniae"); 20,000 saints are said to be buried there. Towards the end of his life Cadfan probably returned to Brittany. 6th century. He is patron of warriors. F. 1 Nov. B. G. II, 2.—L. S.

Cadfarach, C., son of King Caradog Freichfras, brother of Ss. Cawrdaf, Tangwn, and Maethlu; father of S. Elyud; he took the religious habit at Bangor Dunawd on Dee in Wales. 6th century. He is patron of Penegos, Montgomery. F. 24 Oct. B. G., II, 9.—L. S.

Cadfrawd, Bp., C., 4th century, patron of Caerlon (now S. Cadoc's). Perhaps he is identical with S. Adelphius, a British bishop, who was present at the synod of Arles, in 314. His son, Cadgyfarch, is also venerated as a saint. B. G., II, 10.

Cadgyfarch, C., son of S. Cadfrawd and brother of S. Gwrmael, patron of Usk, Monmouth, Wales. B. G., II, 11.

Cado (Cador, Cadwy), C., son of S. Geraint, duke of Cornwall, and father of Duke Constantine. Perhaps he is patron of Porthscatho in Cornwall; folklore makes him the hero of the wars against the Saxons; his brothers were Ss. Cyngar, Jestyn, and Selyf. B. G., II, 11.

Cadoc (Catwg, Cadfael, Cador), abbot, Bp., M., son of Gwynllwy (Gundleus), king of Glamorgan, Wales; b. about 497 and educated at Caerwent, disciple of S. Tathai; to escape military leadership he became a monk and founded Llanccarfan, about 518; in 523 he crossed over to Ireland and remained three years with S. Carthag at Saigir; then he returned to Wales and settled at Llanspudid, Brecknock, about 526, but, after his father's death, returned to Llanccarfan; in 528, he consigned the abbey to S. Gildas and went to Scotland; in 544, he made a pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem, but was present at the synod of Llandewi Brefi, in 545. When the yellow plague broke out, he fled to Brittany, with S. Gildas, in 547, and led a hermit's life at Morbihan, diocese of Vannes. In 551 he returned to Llanccarfan, but resigned (in 575) and retired to Beneventum (Benevanna, a town in South Wales, not Beneventum in Italy), where he exercised the functions of a bishop. He was pierced with a spear by a Saxon soldier, in church, about 577. He is patron against scrofula and deafness. F. 23 Jan. dp. in S. Michael's Priory, Newport, and in Belmont Cathedral, Wales; at Vannes simpl. 21 Sept. He is patron of Llanspyddid and many other churches in Wales and Brittany. Llanccarfan was one of the great monasteries of Wales. B. G. II, 12 and 14.—Moran, 14.—L. S.

Cadrod, C., in Wales, of the line of Coel, a chieftain of Chalfchfynydd in North Britain (Kelso, Roxburyshire); he is said to have embraced the religious life. 6th century. F. unknown. B. G. II 42.

Cadroe, abbot; b. in Antrim, Ireland, son of Fochartach, disciple of S. Bean; he crossed over to England, from there to Belgium and, with 13 companions, lived in the religious establishment of S. Malcallen, at Thérasche; later on he was elected abbot of Wasor; in 955, abbot of S. Felix and S. Clement at Metz. D. at Neirstein, Alsace, while visiting Empress Adelheid, 6 March, 978. F. 6 March. O'H., III, 181.—Moran, 196.

Cadwalladr, abbot, C., a disciple of S. Cadoc, whom he followed to Armorica, in 547; there he became abbot of a monastery on an islet in the sea of Belz. S. Segal near Chateaulin is dedicated to him. F. 18 Oct. B. G. II 46.

Cadwalladr Fendigaid, king, C., the last Gwledig (sovereign) of the ancient Cymric race; son of the valiant Cadwallon (victor in 14 battles); fell against S. Oswald at Heavensfield; himself a man of peaceable disposition (Cadomedd, "battle-shunner"); d. in 664. He is venerated in Wales as one of the three canonized kings of Britain; his pilgrimage to Rome is apocryphal. Many churches are dedicated to him. F. 12 Nov. C. was expected to return some day to lead the Brythons to victory. B. G. II 43.—Moran 51.—L. S.

Cadwallon Lawhir, a doubtful Welsh saint. He put an end to the Irish occupation of North Wales and completed the Cuneddan conquest; he was the father of the celebrated Maelgwn Gwynedd; d. in 517. B. G. II 46.

Cadwr, Bp., C., son of Ednyfed, king of Gwent, Wales and grandson of Maccen Wledig, i. e. Emperor Maximus the Spaniard and his wife S. Helen; he resided at Caerleon on Usk. B. G. II 47.

Caecilia, M., at Abitene in proconsular Africa; v. S. Saturninus, 12 Feb. H. L.

Caecilia (called Clara), V., abbess of Remiremont, diocese of S. Dié, daughter of S. Romaric, who founded a convent for her and her sister Alzatrude, about 670. F. 12 Aug. P. B.—F. J. 234.

Caecilia, V., at Susteren; v. S. Benedicta, 16 Nov.

Caecilia, V., M., at Rome; one of the most highly venerated virgins of the ancient Church; her name is in the Canon of the Roman Mass. She is a scion of the noble Roman family of the Corneli. Her acts relate that she converted her betrothed husband, Valerianus, and induced him to lead a virginal life; also his brother, Tiburtius, was gained over to the faith, together with Maximus, an officer of the prefect; the three men were beheaded, as was also Caecilia, after a fruitless attempt to suffocate her in her bath. These acts, however, have no historical value; they are a pious romance and, in a striking manner, resemble the apocryphal (Gnostic) acts of S. Thomas. The relation between Caecilia, Tiburtius, and Valerianus may have some historical foundation. The period of S. Caecilia's death is uncertain; probably she suffered under Alexander Severus (about 229, 16 Sept.), whilst the emperor was in the Orient, or under Julian the Apostate (?). She was buried in the papal crypt (Cemetery of S. Callistus); her relics were found in 821 by Paschalis I and transferred to S. Caecilia in Trastevere (titular church since the 4th century), which he rebuilt. In 1599 her relics were found incorrupt by Cardinal Sfrondati (Statue of Madero). She is patroness of poets and musicians, organ-builders and singers, because her office commences with the words "Cantantibus organis" (Music at her marriage feast). The Roman church celebrated her feast, 16 Sept., in the 4th century. The feast of 22 Nov. originated at her church in Trastevere; 16 Sept. is the anniversary of her desposition on the Via Appia. The crypt of her church was splendidly restored by Cardinal Rampolla, 1900-1901, when the remains of her house were uncovered. F. 22 Nov. dp. in the Latin Church; full office in the Greek and Syrian Churches. Tr. rel. 20 Oct. dp. maj. in S. Cecilia; in dioc. of Albi (Princ. Patr.) Finding of relics 28 Feb.; Tr. rel. 7 Aug. Caesarius, archbp. of Arles, 502–542, a light of the Church in southern Gaul and one of the greatest popular orators of all times. B. about 469, near Cabillon, of a noble Roman family (his father was count of Chalon); he joined the clergy at Chalon, but, in 489, left home secretly to take the habit at Lérins in the Mediterranean Sea. Sent to Arles by S. Porcarius, he was chosen abbot of a monastery on an island in the Rhone; here he wrote his monastic rule, which was used in the monasteries of southern Gaul for centuries. His rule is based on that of Lérins, but it soon gave way to that of S. Columban and eventually to that of S. Benedict. In 502 he was elected bishop of Arles; for nearly half a century he was the most influential of the bishops of southern Gaul; he preached at least once a day; his sermons attacked corruption, worldliness, and pagan customs; they are remarkable for their polished form and fertility of thought. In 505, he was exiled to Bordeaux by the Visigoth King Alaric II, but speedily recalled; after the conquest of Arles by the Ostrogoths (510), he travelled to Ravenna to exculpate himself (513); from there he went to Rome and obtained the pallium from Pope Symmachus, who made him Apostolic Vicar of Gaul and Spain, thus deciding the old quarrel over the primacy in Gaul in favor of Arles. He assembled six synods, incl. that of Orange (529), which condemned Semipelagianism. When Arles was taken by the Franks (568), Caesarius retired from public life and spent most of his time in the monastery he had founded for his sister, S. Caesaria. D. at Arles, 27 Aug., 543. Cajan, of the family of King Brychan (?), patron of Tregajan, Anglesey. F. 25 Sept. B. G., II, 51.—L. S.

Cajan, C., a son or grandson of King Brychan of Brecknock. A church at Tregaidian in Anglesea perpetuates his memory.

Cajetan (Gaetano), C., co-founder of the Clerics Regular, called "Theatines"; b. at Vicenza, in venetia, in 1480, of the noble Tieni family. In 1505 he obtained the degree of doctor of laws at Padua; the next year he went to Rome, where he was appointed protonotary at the court of Pope Julius II, in 1508; he joined the Congregation of the Love of God and inspired it with new enthusiasm, promoting principally frequent Communion; he was ordained priest in 1516. In 1517, he returned to Vicenza and (in 1519) through the confraternity of S. Jerome, he founded a hospital for incurables; by his spiritual director he was sent to Venice and to Rome, where he was the centre of all the spiritual and charitable agencies at work. To remedy the evils of the Church, which then was sick in head and members, with John Peter Caraffa, Bp. of Chieti (Theate) and two other priests, he founded, in 1523, the Congregation of Canons Regular (Cajetans or Theatines), which was distinguished for its absolute trust in Divine Providence. The rule prescribed that the Theatines were to be without property and also were not to beg (approved 24 June, 1524). During the "Sacco di Roma," in 1527, Cajetan escaped to Venice; in 1533, he founded a house in Naples; 1540-1543, he was again in Venice; he was elected second superior of his Order. Disappointed over the transfer and the prorogation of the Council of Trent, he died at Naples, 7 Aug., 1543. Beatified, 8 Aug. 1629; canonized, 12 Apr., 1671. Cajus (Gajus), M., Pope, 17 Dec., 283-296. Nothing whatever is known of his life; later accounts say that he was born at Salona, Dalmatia; the report that he was a relative of Emperor Diocletian is unreliable; he is said to have concealed himself in the catacombs for eight years during the persecution, wherefore he is called a martyr. The formal recognition of the six Orders, Ostiarius, Lector, Exorcist, Acolyte, Subdeacon and Deacon, is attributed to him. D. 22 Apr., 296. His relics were found in the cemetery of S. Callistus, in 1622. The church of S. Cajus at Rome was originally his house; it was destroyed in 1876 and the relics of S. Cajus were brought to S. Susanna. F. 22 Apr. Rom. Calepodius, M., a Roman priest; he founded the cemetery named for him on the Via Aurelia; was beheaded under Alexander Severus; his body was thrown into the Tiber, 1 May, 222, but rescued and buried on the Via Aurelia by Pope Callistus. His companions were: the consul Palmatius with his wife and children and 42 of his retainers; S. Simplicius, a senator, 68 of his family and dependents, and Ss. Felix and Blanda, husband and wife. These martyrs were not arraigned before judges, but seem to have been victims of an outburst of fury on the part of the ignorant heathen mob. C.'s relics are now under the high altar of S. Callistus and Cyprianus, Mm., in the ancient diocese of Rieux (Riva), near Toulouse. F. 27 Aug. P. B.

Callistus (Calixtus), M., Pope, 217–222. According to the "Philosophumena" he had been a slave of Carpophorus (a Christian of the household of the emperor); when he lost a sum of money by speculation, he was imprisoned by his master for a time, but when Callistus demanded the lost sum from the Jews, they accused him of being a Christian and he was sent to the Sardinian mines. The attack of the "Philosophumena" on the character of Callistus is so violent that we may conclude it is much exaggerated. It seems hardly possible that the electors of Rome should have chosen as their bishop a man who was a convicted swindler. Liberated by Pope Victor I, Callistus was ordained deacon by Pope Zephyrin and appointed administrator of the cemetery, now called the catacomb of S. Callisto, Via Appia. He showed great activity against the Monarchians and Montanists. After the death of S. Zephyrin, he was elected bishop of Rome. The five years of his vigorous pontificate were marked by many salutary measures: the moderation of the rigorous penitential discipline, the repression of the Patripassians, Sabellians and other heretics, the fixing of Ember day fasts, etc. The Subordinationistic faction put up as antipope the priest Hippolytus, who accused S. Callistus of heresy, because he granted communion, after true penance, to those who had committed adultery and fornication; the Montanist Tertullian also was a bitter enemy of Callistus. In a riot or outburst of the pagans against the Christians, he was flung headlong from the window of a high building in the Trastevere district, in 223. The current account of his martyrdom is a fiction of the 7th century. He probably was a martyr, 14 Oct. 222, and was buried in the cemetery of S. Calepodius, Via Aurelia, where a basilica was built in his honor. His relics are now in S. Maria in Trastevere; large parts of his body are at Verdun. (Tr. rel., 11 Aug.) F. 14 Oct. Rom. Camillus de Lellis, C., founder of the Canons Regular of a Good Death (Infirmis Ministrantium). B. 25 May, 1550, at Buchianico, diocese of Chieti, of a noble but poor family. His father was an official, who had served in the Neapolitan and French armies. After a dissolute life at Venice and Naples, C. became a nurse in S. Giacomo's hospital, Rome, but was dismissed on account of his quarrelsome disposition and his passion for gambling; he again entered the Venetian army (1569). After the end of the war he determined to reform and, in 1575, was admitted as a lay-brother in the Capuchin convent at Trivento, but was soon dismissed on account of abscesses on his feet; he returned to Rome, was again admitted in S. Giacomo and, for his prudence and piety, appointed director of the hospital. Then he founded a society of laymen for the care of the sick and dying, and was ordained priest in 1584, by Thomas Goldwell of S. Asaph, Wales, the last of the old English bishops. The confraternity founded by S. Camillus developed into a religious order, called "Camillians," or "Fathers of a Good Death," or "Agonizanti." The Order was approved in 1586 and 1591. Camillus was its first general, at S. Maddalena, Rome, but resigned (in 1607) to spend the rest of his life in various hospitals of his Order. D. 14 July, 1614. Beatified, 7 Apr., 1742; canonized, 29 June, 1746. His relics are at S. Maria Maddalena, Rome. In 1886 he was declared patron of hospitals and the sick. F. 14 and 18 July Rom. Carthagh, the Younger, of Mochuda, Bp., C., son of Fingen (a Munster chieftain); b. in Kerry, about 555, and educated by S. Carthagh the Elder. In 580 he built a cell at Kiltallagh, to lead a hermit's life; then he spent one year at Bangor; later, acting on the advice of S. Colman Elo, he founded Rahan monastery, King's Co., about 590. As bishop of the Fercal district, he wrote a severe rule for his monks, similar to that of the Trappists. At Easter, 635 he was driven with 800 monks of his community from Rahan by Blathmaic, a Meathian prince. He established a monastery, which developed into the great school of Lismore on Blackwater River, where he died, 14 May, 637. His tomb was discovered by Grattan-Flood, in 1891. Caspar del Bufalo (B.), C., founder of the Congregation of the Precious Blood. B. 6 Jan., 1786, at Rome; he studied at the Roman College, was ordained priest, 31 July, 1808, and appointed Canon at the church of San Marco. Having refused the oath on the French Constitution, he was forced to flee to Bologna and was imprisoned there by order of Napoleon, in 1812; he was exiled to Corsica, in 1814, but pardoned by Murat. Pius VII, in the same year, sent him to give missions to the poor country population in the neighborhood of Rome, where he propagated devotion in honor of S. Francis Xavier. He was a great orator and converted thousands by his fervent charity. He founded the Congregation of Secular Priests for the Missions to the Poor (approved 27 Aug., 1841); Maria de Mattias, under his guidance, established the Sisterhood of the Adorers of the Precious Blood. He also checked brigandage in the mountains of Albano, but came in conflict with papal officers, wherefore he was, at first, in disfavor with Leo XII. He was appointed Canon of S. M. in Cosmedin; but absolutely refused to go to Brazil as internuncio. D. at Rome, before his Society was approved, 28 Dec., 1837. Beatified 18 Dec., 1904. His body is at Rome in S. M. in Trivio. Cassianus, M., Bp. of Seben (Sabiona), Tyrol. According to tradition he was the first apostle and bishop of Seben; driven from home by barbarian hordes, he fled to Bavaria, but returned to Seben and was martyred there. A document of 845 states that S. Cassianus of Imola is patron of the church of Seben; the current legend claims that S. Cassianus of Seben went to Imola and was killed there. Cassianus, bishop of Seben, never existed, but this legend originated from the fact that S. Cassian of Imola was patron of Seben and that the new cathedral of Brixen, to which town the see of Seben was transferred in 992 (994), took its title from Ss. Cassian of Imola and Bishop Inguin. Castrensis, C., Bp. of Castel Volturno (now in the archdiocese of Capua), not of Capua; he was one of the African bishops who were exiled during the Vandal persecution; whilst the other bishops wandered through Campania, Castrensis remained at the place of landing, at the mouth of the Volturno and evangelized the surrounding country. It is doubtful if he was an African bishop. Some date his exile under Thrasimond, Vandal king in Africa (496-522); there was a certain Candidianus, bishop of Castra, banished from Africa in the year 484. He would have been styled "Episcopus Castrensis", and it is not impossible that he may be the St. Castrensis of the martyrologies. Others identify him with S. Cataldus, C., Bp. of Taranto, Italy. According to the apocryphal tradition of Taranto, he was an Irishman, who preached the Gospel in the 2nd century. He is a historical personage, but probably did not leave Ireland before 660, where he had taught at the school of Dismore, after S. Carthage. When he returned from a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, the people at Taranto in Apulia constrained him to accept the government of their church; he restored the Christian faith (or the Roman rite?) at Taranto, after the expulsion of the Greeks (671). He may have died about 685. F. 8 March Rom. Mart.; at Taranto dp. 1 cl.; 10 May. Finding of his relics (a. 1071, under Archbp. Drogo) dp. 1 cl. oct. (Princ. Patron). Catharine dei Ricci, V., O. P.; b. at Florence of the noble Ricci family, 25 Apr., 1535; she took the habit of the Third Order of S. Dominic at S. Vincenzo, Prato, where she became mistress of novices, subprioress (in 1547), and prioress (from 1560 up to her death). She is said to have received from Christ the ring of espousals and the stigmata. Her ecstatic life and the gift of miracles brought her into contact with eminent saints, such as S. Philip Neri and S. Magdalen Pazzi. D. at Prato, 1 Feb., 1590. Canonized 6 Oct., 1746. F. 13 Feb. Rom. Mart.; Totum dp. O. P.; at Prato (Compatron of the city) 3 Feb. dp. 2 cl. F. of her Stigmatization 14 Apr. dp. Catharine of Bologna, V., O. F. M., Poor Clare and mystical writer; b. at Bologna, 8 Sept., 1413; she was maid of honor to princess Margaret of Este at the court of Ferrara; there she joined the Augustinian nuns; this community, in 1432, adopted the rule of the Poor Clares; in 1457, she was elected superioress of the house at Bologna. Her life may be said to have been passed in making intercession for the conversion of sinners and for the salvation of men. Endowed with the gift of prophecy and miracles, she bore her many trials with heroic patience and cheerfulness. Her experiences of mystical life she wrote down in her "Revelations on the Seven Spiritual Weapons." D. at Bologna, 9 March, 1463. Her body (now shrunk and turned completely black) is venerated in a chapel of her monastery at Bologna. Canonized, 11 June, 1712. F. 9 March dp. maj. O. F. Catharine Fieschi-Adorno of Genoa, widow; b. at Genoa of the noble Fieschi family; in 1463 she married the fickle patrician Giuliano Adorno, who left her a penniless widow in 1474. Catharine, after a sudden conversion, as a member of the Lombard Annunciates, gave herself to heroic work of charity in the hospital of Pomatone, especially during the plague of 1497-1501. Her revelations are esteemed by theologians; she is called the "Apostle of Purgatory." Consumed by the fire of divine love within her, she died, 15 Sept., 1510. Her relics are in the church of her hospital. Beatified in 1675, canonized, 16 June, 1737. F. 15 Sept.

Catharine of Sweden, V. Born in 1331, daughter of Ulfo, prince of Nierck in Sweden and S. Birgitta; she was educated at Risberg convent in Sweden and married to a pious nobleman of German descent, Egart of Kuernen, with whom she lived in continency. After the death of her husband she followed her mother to Rome, in 1349; she remained her faithful disciple and companion and, in 1373, brought her body to Wadstena monastery. From 1375 to 1380 she was again in Rome, promoting her mother's canonization. In 1379 she obtained the confirmation of the Salvatorian Order, instituted by her mother at Wadstena. D. at Wadstena (Vatzen) 22 March, 1381. Cult confirmed by Innocent VIII, in 1474. F. before 1500 simpl. at Upsala and Cologne 2 Aug.; now (1910) in Scandinavia and Poland 23 March. dp. Catharine of Siena, V., 3rd O. P.; b. 23 March, 1347, at Siena, as the 25th child of the wool-dyer Giacomo Benincasa. She made the vow of chastity at the age of seven; in her sixteenth year she took the habit of the Dominican tertiaries and renewed the life of the anchorites of the desert in a little room of her father's house. After three years of celestial visitations and familiar conversation with Christ, she underwent the mystical experience known as "Spiritual Espousals," probably during the carnival of 1366 (F. Thursday before Quinquagesima). Though always suffering physical pain, living for long intervals on practically nothing but the Bl. Sacrament, she was ever radiantly happy and full of practical wisdom no less than of the deepest spiritual insight. Her life of mortification and corporal castigation, her self-immolation in nursing victims of the pestilence (1374), the gift of miracles and prophecies, and her power of converting hardened sinners, gained for her a large circle of admirers and disciples. Secular and ecclesiastical rulers asked her advice in private and public affairs. Pisa and Lucca (1375) kept their allegiance to Pope Gregory XI through her efforts. She reconciled Florence to the Apostolic See (1378); the return of the Pope from Avignon (1376) was her work. At the outbreak of the Western Schism she gained Cardinals and princes for the cause of Urban VI and tore all Italy away from the antipope. In November, 1378, Urban VI summoned her to Rome, where she spent the remainder of her life, working strenuously for the reformation of the Church and serving the sick and destitute. The reform of the Dominican Order in Italy and Germany, begun by her confessor, Raymond of Capua, is ascribed to her influence. D. at Rome, 29 Apr., 1380. Her body is under the high altar of S. Maria sopra Minerva. Pius II canonized her, 29 Apr., 1461. She is patroness against pestilence and headache. F. in the Latin Church, since 1597 simpl. 29 Apr.; since 1628 dp. 30 April. Catharine, V., at Parc-aux-Dames monastery near Louvain; she was converted from Judaism by an apparition of the Bl. V. Mary and possessed the gift of miracles. 13th century. F. 4 May. Cist. Men.—P. B.

Catharine, V., M., called by the Greeks "Aeikatharina," the "ever pure." The romance of her martyrdom may be founded on the report of Eusebius (H. E., VIII, 14). When the Emperor Maxentius, in 305 at Alexandria, carried off the wives and daughters of the citizens, one of the most distinguished and richest ladies of the city resisted him, and she was a Christian. Having made frequent attempts to win her over, he punished her with exile and took away her wealth. This noble lady did not die a martyr. On this slender foundation may have been built the "acts" of S. Catharine, V., M. She was the daughter of a king, a girl of wondrous beauty and learning. Maxentius invited fifty Greek philosophers to contend with her in public argument; she convinced them all, and all fifty were burned by the enraged Emperor. When she declined to share the throne with Maxentius, he had her whipped and cast into prison. There she converted Faustina, the legal wife of the Emperor, and Porphyrius. Faustina's attendant, who, with two hundred soldiers converted by Porphyrius, were sentenced to death by Maxentius. A wheel, set with razors, was constructed for the execution of S. Catharine, but when she was placed upon it, the wheel broke and the razors flew about hacking and cutting the throats of the bystanders. Then her head was cut off with a sword, and angels came and carried off her body to Mount Sina. There Emperor Justinian I built a monastery, which, after the discovery of S. Catharine's body in the eighth century, was called after her. Historically established is only the simple fact of the presence of her relics in the church of the monastery at the foot of Mount Sina; all the rest is pure fiction. No traces of her veneration can be found before the 8th century. During the Middle Ages she was the most popular of all saints, and her legend has been used much in works of art and poetry, e. g., her Betrothal to the Christ Child, the Controversy with the Sages, etc. S. Catharine has been surrounded with a halo of charming poetry and miraculous legends. She is one of the Fourteen Helpers in Need. But since the 18th century she has lost her former popularity. On account of her success in overthrowing the arguments of the sages, she is patroness of jurists and philosophers, of students, millers (wheel), wagon-makers, teachers, etc. Her name is in the Ambrosian Canon of the Mass and in the Russian Introduction to the Mass. F. 25 Nov. Rom. Mart., in the Latin, Greek and Syrian Churches full office of the day. In the Russian Church, 24 Nov. In Egypt dp. 2 cl., at Alexandria dp. 1 cl. oct. She is Princ. Charles the Great (Charlemagne). Emperor, C., the first sovereign of the Christian Empire of the West. B. 2 Apr., 742, probably at Aix-la-Chapelle, son of King Pepin and Berta of France. On 28 July, 754, with his father and his younger brother Carlomann, he was crowned Frankish king at S. Denis, by Pope Stephen II; after the death of Pepin (768) and Carlomann (771) he ruled over the entire realm. In 774, he de-throned Desiderius, king of the Lombards; in 778, he carried the campaign into Spain; in 787, he vanquished Duke Thassilo of Bavaria; 772–804, he conquered the Saxons, for whom he founded the episcopal sees of Bremen, Verden, Münster, Paderborn, Osnabrück, and Minden; 791–799, he annihilated the Avars. In 781, he made a treaty with Pope Adrian on the States of the Church; he was crowned Emperor at Rome, 25 Dec., 800. In his large empire he showed great organizing talent, raised the standard of education, insisted on conscientious fulfilment of official duties by bishops and priests, and reformed cathedral and cloistral schools. He united the German tribes of Germany with the Romanized German tribes of the South and West. D. 28 Jan. 814. Although guilty of grave moral faults in the early part of his reign, he was canonized by the Antipope Paschalis III, for his merits on behalf of Church and State and for political reasons; his tomb was opened by Otto III, in 1000, and again by Barbarossa, 29 Dec., 1165, when for the city of Aix-la-Chapelle (Aachen) his feast was instituted. Charles Borromeo, archbishop of Milan, Cardinal, C.; b. in the castle of Arona, 2 Oct. 1538. In 1550 he received the tonsure and was appointed titular abbot of San Graziano e Felino, Arona; he studied law at Pavia. Called to Rome by his uncle, Pius IV, in 1560, he was charged with the administration of the Papal States, created Cardinal (31 Jan., 1560) and chosen administrator of the archdiocese of Milan (8 Feb., 1560), when only 22 years of age and not yet in deacon's orders. He was Legate for the Romagna, the Marches, and Bologna, protector of the Franciscans and Carmelites, also active in politics in State and Church. When after the death of his older brother Frederick, his relatives (even the Pope) urged him to marry, he secretly took Holy Orders, in 1563 (priest 4 Sept.; bishop 7 Dec.); the pallium he received 23 March, 1564. As Papal Secretary of State he was one of the chief factors in the Catholic counter-reformation: he urged the re-opening and conclusion of the Council of Trent, the carrying out of its resolutions by the Roman Curia, and the drawing up of the Roman Catechism. The condition of the archdiocese of Milan was most deplorable; for 73 years no bishop had resided in the city of Milan; disorder and license prevailed to such an extent that the administrator sent by St. Charles was unable to remedy it. He entreated him to come to his diocese himself. St. Charles, moved by this letter, spoke so urgently to his uncle, the Pope, that he allowed him to go to his see. He entered his cathedral city, Sept. 23, 1565, five years after his appointment. After 1565 he resided uninterruptedly at Milan. The work of his life was the reform of his immense diocese and the suppression of Protestantism (in the Valtellino); he was assisted by the Jesuits and by a Congregation of secular priests (Oblates of S. Ambrose) founded by him in 1578. He erected seminaries for the education of priests, reformed the monasteries, and was indefatigable in visiting the parishes. He held five provincial and eleven diocesan synods. His "Instructions" are a manual of Pastoral Theology. By his zeal, his asceticism, his liberality, and self-sacrifice at the time of pestilence (1576) he gained unlimited influence. He miraculously escaped an attempt to murder him, 26 Oct. 1569. D. 3 Nov. 1584, only 46 years old. His relics are in the crypt of the cathedral of Milan. Beatified in 1601; canonized, in 1610. He is patron against pestilence. F. 4 Nov. in the Latin Church. Christina, V., M., at Bolsena, Tuscany. The legend relates that, like many other saints, she was of the noble Roman house of the Anicii; after having, in childish zealotry, destroyed the idols of her father, she was martyred under Diocletian. She is one of the most popular saints of the Western Church, but is hardly identical with the Oriental saint of Tyrus in Phoenicia, with whom she has been confounded by later writers. It has been supposed that the relics of S. Christina of Tyrus were transferred to Bolsena, in the 5th or 6th century, but the Western saint lived and died in Bolsena; her feast was assigned to the date of the Oriental martyr. Her tomb was probably venerated at Bolsena in the 4th century. Her relics were stolen and brought to Sepino, diocese of Bojano, at the end of the 10th century, from Sepino to Palermo, in 1160 (some to Torcelli near Venice); her head is in the high altar of the Milan cathedral. Christopher (Christobal, Tobal, Kester, Kitt), M., one of the 14 Holy Helpers and one of the most popular saints of the Eastern and Western Churches; a church was dedicated to him at Constantinople, 22 Sept., 452. He is not a mythical person, but probably died in Lydia, Asia Minor. The simple form of his Passion, v. Analecta Bollandiana, 1882, 122 ss. and 1891, 394 ss. The Greek story has the appearance of a clumsy compilation of incidents from Holy Writ; it relates the most monstrous and paradoxical things, e.g., that he had a dog's head and ate men, but when he believed in Christ he was transformed. According to the Western legend of Walter the subdeacon (983), Reprobis, a giant from Canaan, called in baptism Christophorus, was beheaded at Samos in Lycia after many torments, under king Dagnanus (Maximinus Daja?). Later legends and the Legenda Aurea (13th century) tell of a giant named Offorus, who first served the most powerful king, then the devil and, at last, the most powerful of all, the Lord Christ. The legend says that as ferryman for poor travelers, he carried an unknown child across the ford, and was borne down by its weight, despite his gigantic stature and great strength; for the Child was Christ, carrying in his hands the weight of the whole world (Christophoros). The only historically certain facts are his name and martyrdom, but it would be an error to derive the personality of this saint from the Greek Hercules or the Egyptian Anubis, or from some Teutonic myth. The oldest picture of C., in the monastery of Mt. Sina, dates from the 6th century. His statues were placed at the entrances of churches and dwelling houses, and frequently at bridges and city gates, as it was supposed that he who looked on a figure of this Saint was sure not to meet with sudden death that day. He is patron of travellers, facchini, against hail, thunderstorms, and sudden death. Chrysanthus and Daria, Roman Mm. Their acts are an early Christian romance, but their existence, martyrdom, and ancient veneration are certain. The following facts may be historical: Chrysanthus, son of Polemius of Alexandria, was converted to the faith at Rome and lived with Daria in virginal wedlock. For their zeal in spreading Christianity they were buried alive in a sandpit, on the Salarian Way, under Numerian, in 283. On the first anniversary of these martyrs the tribune Claudius, Hilaria his wife, Maurus and Jason, their sons, the priest Diodorus and the deacon Marianus were walled up in a tomb and died of hunger. The relics of Ss. Chrysanthus and Daria were brought to Prüm in Rhenania, in 844; from there, partly, to Münstereiffel, in 848. Chrysogonus, Bp., M., at Capua; v. S. Nicanus, 23 Nov.

Chrysogonus, M.; it is difficult to tell if he was a Sirmian (Aquilejan) martyr honored at Rome, or a Roman martyr honored at Sirmium; his cult certainly was very early (4th century) transferred to Rome with that of S. Anastasia. A well known Roman titular church in Trastevere bears his name to this day. According to the current legend he was the spiritual adviser of S. Anastasia, was brought to Sirmium (Aquileja) and there beheaded after the usual torture, in 304 (31 May?). His body is said to be at Zara in Dalmatia, where he is principal patron with S. Anastasia. F. in the Latin Church simpl. 24 Nov. (formerly 23 Nov.) His name is in the Canon of the Roman Mass; dp. in Istria, Friaul and Dalmatia; at Zara dp. 1 cl. oct.; Tr. rel. 19 May dp. Cirycus (Cyricus, Quiricus), and Julitta, Mm., of Tarsus (not of Antioch). Their regular acts are apocryphal; a more reliable account by Bishop Theodore of Iconium gives the following story: Julitta, a widowed lady of Iconium, during the prosecution of Diocletian, with her little boy Cirycus, aged three years, and two maid servants, escaped to Seleucia, from there to Tarsus in Cilicia, where she was arrested by order of the governor, Alexander. Whilst the mother was being tortured, Alexander took the boy on his knee, but the boy screamed and slapped the governor, who in a sudden burst of passion flung the boy down the marble steps of his throne; the child's skull was broken and his body thrown where the carcasses of malefactors were usually cast. Julitta was beheaded (in 304); both were buried by the two maids and the place revealed upon the accession of Constantine. The relics which bishop Ambrose brought to Auxerre from Antioch are spurious. Perhaps Cirycus has no connection at all with Julitta; the latter may have died at Antioch, Cirycus at Tarsus. His cult spread through the entire Church: churches were erected in his honor in Syria, Palestine, Pontus, Lydia, Italy and Gaul. The 404 martyrs which some old martyrologies give him as companions, have been added erroneously. F. 16 June Rom. Mart., formerly simpl. in the Latin Church, but abolished by Pius V. Clare (Clara), V., M., of the mythical Ursuline martyrs in N. D. des Joies, near Compiègne. 16 May. P. B.

Clare of Assisi, V., foundress of the Poor Clares. B. 16 July, 1194, at Assisi, of the rich and noble family dei Sciffi. Won by S. Francis for the ascetical life, she took the vows from the Poverello on Palm Sunday, 18 March, 1212, when 18 years old. S. Francis provided a refuge for her, first with the Benedictine nuns of S. Paolo, then, when her relatives persecuted her there, at S. Angelo de Panoso, outside the city gates. At last S. Francis brought her and her sister S. Agnes to a small house next to the church of San Damiano, where a rapidly increasing community gathered around her. Her mother Hortulana and her third sister Beatrice also joined her there. For 40 years Clare governed this community, tried by Our Lord with sickness for 27 years. From Innocent III she obtained sanction for the privilege of extreme poverty, of living solely on the alms of the beneficent; and the Order has ever since borne the title of the "Poor Clares." Gregory IX thought the rule unreasonable and offered to relax it, but Clare entreated that it be maintained in its full rigor. S. Clare is said to have practiced mortifications to such an extent that the Pope and S. Francis combined to insist on her moderating her passion for self-torture. S. Clare lived to see her Order spread far beyond Italy. D. 11 Aug., 1253. Her body was deposited in S. Giorgio and after her canonization (1255) brought to her own church (1260), where it was elevated, 23 Sept., 1850, and deposited in a special chapel, 29 Sept., 1872. Thomas à Celano (a contemporary writer) relates that her convent was attacked by the Saracens of Frederick II and that S. Clare drove them away, carrying the Bl. Sacrament. She is patroness against sore eyes. Clare of the Cross, V., O. S. A.; b. at Montefalco, diocese of Spoleto, about 1268; from her sixth year on she lived as a recluse under the rule of the Third Order of S. Francis, with her sister Jane (d. 22 Nov., 1291). Their cell, in 1290, grew into the Augustinian convent of the Holy Cross, of which Clare was elected abbess. After 11 years of suffering in prayer and penance, she received great mystical gifts, ecstasies and supernatural knowledge. Her life was one of ecstatic prayer and rigorous penance. Filled with an ardent longing for perfection, she had for her distinctive devotion that to the Passion of Christ. To a Sister marvelling at her patience she is reported to have said: "If thou seekest the Cross of Christ, take my heart; in it thou wilt find my Suffering Lord." D. 18 Aug., 1308. Her heart, in which, after her death were found impressed the instruments of Christ's Passion, and her body are incorrupt to-day. Her cult was approved in 1624; she was canonized, 8 Dec., 1881. Clare Agolanti (B.), of Rimini, matron, 2nd O. F. M.; b. of noble parents at Rimini, in 1282; she was married twice, and led a life of sinful dissipation. When, during the civil strifes, her father and brother were executed, she was converted and, after her second husband's death, took the habit of the Third Order and resolved to expiate her sins by serving the sick. Later on she joined the Poor Clares and became superioress of Our Lady of Angels at Rimini. D. 10 Feb., 1346. Cult approved, 10 Feb., 1784. Her body is now in the Cathedral of Rimini. Clare Gambacorta (B.), widow, O. P.; b. at Pisa, in 1362, engaged when seven years old, married at 12; a widow at 15, she joined the Poor Clares; taken from the convent by her father, she took the Dominican habit at S. Croce, Pisa, in 1378; later on she went to the reformed monastery of S. Domenico, founded by herself, where she was chosen subprioress and later prioress. From her work for the reform of her Order she is called "the Teresa of the Dominicans." B. Peter of Pisa, the founder of the Hieronymites, was her brother. D. at Pisa, 17 Apr., 1419. Cult approved in 1830. F. 17 Apr. dp. O. P., at Pisa, Prato and Livorno and by the Hieronymites.—Seeb. 106.—Dom. 98.

Clarus, Bp., M.; he was a native of Africa in the 3rd century, and was sent from Rome to preach the gospel in Périgueux, Tulle, and Sarlat, France; he was beheaded at Lectoure, Gascony; a later tradition claims that he was sent to Rome by Pope Anacletus. He certainly did not preach at Cologne on the Rhine, but at Colonia Alba, i. e., Albi. He came to Gascony after Ss. Martial and Saturnin, but is not identical with S. Clair of Nantes. Because they had buried Ss. Zoe and Tranquillinus, they were racked and then cast into the sea, in 286. It is very probable that these saints are identical with the five saints of the same names, styled at Rome the "Quattro Coronati" (Four Crowned Martyrs), of 8 Nov., who were drawn into the cycle of S. Sebastian by the author of the spurious legend of this great Roman hero. F. 7 July Rom. Mart. P. B.—L. S.

Luceja has been applied to the martyrs of Troyes (France) whose acts were unknown. Their relics are at Joazeur. F. 21 July at Troyes.—L. S., July, p. 497.

Clement of Ancyra, (megalomartyr), Bp.; b. at Ancyra in Galatia of a pagan father and a Christian mother; after the early death of his parents he was adopted by a Christian matron; he instructed boys in religion and served the poor, especially the orphans. At the age of 20 he was elected bishop of Ancyra. Under Diocletian, soldiers dragged him from city to city. At last he was beheaded at Ancyra, 23 Jan., 304. His relics were brought to Constantinople. His skull is in Val-de-Grace abbey, since 1204. His companions were the deacons Agathangelus, Christopher, and Chariton, many orphan boys who were his pupils (they suffered at Ancyra), and the soldiers Phengon and Evagrius, who were beheaded at Amisus (Helenopont). The account of the martyrdom of S. Clement and companions is not trustworthy. F. 23 Jan. Rom. Mart.; in Greek and Syrian Churches full office. Clement Mary Hofbauer, C., C. SS. R., the "Apostle of Vienna," Austria. B. at Taatzwitz, Moravia, of Slav parentage, 26 Dec., 1751. His family name was "Dworak," Germanized, "Hofbauer." At the age of 15 years he lost his parents and left home to become a priest. He was a baker's apprentice at Znaim, then entered the Norbertine monastery of Bruck, where he studied Latin. In 1775 he lived as a hermit at Mühlfrauen, but returned to Vienna to work at his trade. After two pilgrimages to Rome, he received permission to lead an anchorite's life near Tivoli, but returned to Vienna a second time, to continue and finish his studies. At Tivoli he had adopted the name of Clement (instead of "John"). In 1783, he was received by the Redemptorists at Rome (San Giuliano), was ordained priest in March, 1785, and sent to Vienna, to found a house there. Not succeeding during the reign of Joseph II, he established himself at Warsaw (in S. Benno, the German Church, 1787–1808), where he founded the first house of his order beyond the Alps, an orphanage, and schools. In 1793, he was appointed vicar general for the countries beyond the Alps. In 1802, he established the first house in Germany, at Jetstetten, near Schaffhausen; the house at Warsaw was closed by Napoleon, in 1807. In 1808, Cl. came to Vienna and for the last 12 years of his life worked there most successfully as preacher, confessor, and organizer of truly Catholic life, also in non-Catholic circles. After S. Alphonsus he was the most influential promoter of the Congregation of the Holy Redeemer. But he was unable to found a house in Vienna. D. 15 March, 1821. Beatified 29 Jan., 1888. Canonized in 1900. Clement I, "the Roman," M., Pope, 92–101, the first of the Apostolic Fathers. According to Tertullian he was the first, according to the tradition of the Roman Church, the third successor of S. Peter, after Linus and Anacletus (Irenaeus, Adversus Haereses, III. 3. 3), a disciple of SS. Peter and Paul. He was probably of Jewish descent and identical with Clement of Philipp. IV. 3. That he was descended from the imperial family of the Flavii, is a later fiction; the story of the martyrdom of S. Clement is fabulous and improbable (confounding Pope Clement with the Consul Tiberius Flavius Clemens). The letter to the Corinthian Church ascribed to him is genuine and was written in 96, when a faction in Corinth revolted against and drove away their bishop; this letter is a strong proof for the primacy of the Roman Church and one of the most precious monuments of the sub-Apostolic age. The graceful story of his having been cast into the Black Sea with an anchor around his neck, and of the shrine built for him beneath the waves by Angels, is well known. Nothing definite is known of S. Clement. His apocryphal life claims that he was exiled with 2,000 other Christians to the Crimea by Trajan. There S. Cyril, in 868, dug up bones which he believed to be the relics of S. Clement and which he transferred to Rome; they rest under the high altar of San Clemente. The head was brought to Cluny. His famous basilica at Rome is now in the hands of the Irish Dominicans; it was built under Constantine. S. Clement is patron of marble-workers and stone-cutters, and of mariners. His name is in the Canon of the Roman Mass. F. in Latin Ch. dp. 23 Nov.; in Greek and Syrian Churches 24 Nov. Full office: in the Russian Church 25 Nov. He is principal patron of Velletri (said to have been born at Velletri), Sevilla (conquest of the city, 23 Nov., 1248), and of Badajoz. At Cluny 27 July: "Coming of his head." Cleophas, one of the disciples whom Christ met on the way to Emmaus (Luke, 24). He probably is identical with Clopas or Alphaeus, who is named in John XIX, 25. Clopas was the father of the Apostle James the Lesser. Hegesippus and Eusebius claim that he was a brother of Joseph, the husband of Mary. The Roman Mart. says that Cleophas, the disciple of Easter Monday, was killed by the Jews at Emmaus. Celestine I. C., Pope, 10 Sept, 422–432. He was one of the greatest popes of the ancient Church. B. in Campania, he was Roman archdeacon under S. Boniface I. When he defended the African priest Apiarius, the African bishops remonstrated at the synod of Carthage (425), asking the Pope not to accept such personal appeals in future. He condemned Nestorius at a Roman synod (430) and was represented at the Council of Ephesus by three Apostolic Legates. He sent S. Germain of Auxerre to Britain (429) to combat Pelagianism; in 431, he sent S. Palladius to preach the gospel and organize the church in Ireland. That he sent S. Patrick (432) is doubted by some, although the Irish Church always claimed that her Apostle came directly from the Apostolic See. In a letter to the bishops of Gaul C. condemned Semipelagianism, defending the doctrine of S. Augustine on grace. D. 27 July, 432. He was buried in the cemetery of S. Priscilla; his relics were transferred to S. Prassede by Paschal I, in 820; from there to Mantua. F. 6 Apr. Rom. Mart. At Rome dp. 7 Apr., dp. maj. in Ireland. Colette (Coleta, Nicolette Boilet), V., reformer of the Poor Clares; a carpenter's daughter, b. at Corbie, Picardy, 13 Jan., 1381; having sought admission first in a Beguine, then in a convent of Benedictine nuns, she, in 1402, locked herself in a cell, built against the walls of the church of Corbie. At last she found her vocation in reviving among the Poor Clares the primitive and austere spirit of S. Francis. In 1406, she made profession of the rule of S. Clare before Pope Benedict XIII, at Nice, and was appointed superior general of the whole Order, to bring it back to the original rigor of its rule. She began her work at Beaume, diocese of Geneva, and traversed France, Savoy, Germany, and Flanders; she gained for her reform 17 convents of the third Order in France alone (Coletines); her special constitutions were sanctioned, in 1434, and adopted by many monasteries of the second Order, even by some friars (Coletani, suppressed in 1517). Her chief devotion was to Our Lord's Passion and her supreme attraction to the practice of holy poverty. With S. Vincent Ferrer she had a share in putting an end to the Great Schism of the West. Among the miracles she wrought was the raising of a dead man to life. D. at Ghent, 6 March, 1447. Her relics were brought from Ghent to Poligny on the Jura in 1785. Columba or Columcille (Columbkil), C., abbot of Iona and apostle of Caledonia, "the greatest saint of the Celtic race and, after S. Patrick, the most striking figure in Celtic history." "He was a poet, a statesman and a scholar as well as a great missionary, the apostle of many tribes and the founder of many churches" (Healy). B. at Gartan Donegal, 7 Dec., 521, as son of Fedlimidh, of the royal race of Niall the Great (Clan O'Donnell), he was ordained deacon by S. Finian at Moville, priest by S. Mobhi at Glasnevin. He founded the monastery and school at Derry, in 545, that of Durrow, in 553, that of Kells about 554. After the battle of Cuil-Freimhne he left Ireland (penance imposed by S. Molaise for having urged his kinsmen to war against king Diarmaid?) with 12 companions, in 563, and founded the great monastery of Iona (Hy) off the coast of Scotland, the great religious centre for Scotland and the north of England. He preached the gospel to the northern Picts, converting King Brude, accompanied by S. Comgall of Bangor and S. Canice. For 34 years he travelled about evangelizing the Highlands of Scotland. Twice he returned to Ireland: in 575, to assist at the convention of Drumceat, where he protected the national bards; and in 585. D. at Iona, 9 June, 597, at the foot of the altar. S. Adamnan, one of his successors at Iona, has left us an important and interesting life of S. Columbeille. His relics, to protect them from the Danes, were brought to Ireland and deposited with those of S. Patrick and S. Brigid at Downpatrick. His rule was observed in many monasteries of Britain, Gaul, Germany, and Northern Italy, but was later supplanted by the Benedictine rule. Columban, abbot of Lure, disciple and successor of Dichull (Deicolus, 18 Jan.) F. 13 Sept. O'H., IX, 328.

Columban, abbot of Luxeuil and Bobbio, C.; b, in Leinster, Ireland, about 530 (559?). He was educated at Cluain-Inis, in Lough Erne, under Sinnell, then at Bangor (Benchor) under S. Comgall, from whom he received the habit. From Bangor he started with 12 companions in 590, to work as an itinerant missionary, to reform religious life among the clergy, nobility and people, first in England, then in Brittany and, after 591, in Austrasia. His strong individuality and fiery zeal drew to him many disciples, for whom he founded the monastery of Anegary (Haute Saône) and especially, in an ancient castle at the foot of the Vosges, the great monastery of Luxeuil, which was of such importance for the development of monasticism in the Western Church. The severe, sometimes harsh rule which he wrote for his monks, for a while supplanted all other rules in France and elsewhere, until it gave way to the more universal and milder rule of S. Benedict. C.'s tenacity regarding the old British customs (computation of Easter, etc.) brought him into conflict with the Frankish bishops, in 600. When he fearlessly protested against the lascivious life at the Austrasian court, King Thierry II, instigated by Queen Brunehild, exiled him to Nantes (610); from there he fled to King Chlotar II, who sent him to preach the gospel in Alemannia. He settled at Bregenz, on lake Constance, but not knowing the language nor the customs of the country, emigrated to Italy after one year, in 612. There he founded the abbey of Bobbio in the Apennines, extirpating the remnants of paganism and Arianism. D. in a cave near his monastery, 21 Nov., 615. He is patron against insanity and inundations. His mistaken zeal for the Celtic date of Easter and the ill-advised letter he wrote to Pope St. Boniface IV against Pope Vigilius, upholding the so-called "Three Chapters" rejected by the Church, has unfortunately served as a weapon in the hands of the Protestants. F. 21 Nov. Rom Mart. Constantine (Cystennin Gorneu or Cystennin Fendigaid, i. e., the Blessed, or Cystennin Llyddaw), father of Ss. Erbin and Digain, is identified by Baring-Gould (II, 177) with the usurper Constantine, who was proclaimed Emperor in Britain in 407 and who, after having taken holy orders at Arles, was slain near Ravenna, in 411. He is said to have been one of the original founders of Bangor Iltyd, i. e., Llantwit. Llangustennin, Carnarvon, is dedicated to him. But he hardly merits a place amongst the saints. B. G. II, 177.

Constantine, Bp., M.; first bishop of Perugia in Central Italy, together with numerous Christians of his flock, is stated to have been put to death on account of his religion under the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, about 178. * Constantine the Great, "equal to the Apostles," the first Christian Roman Emperor (Cajus, Flavius, Valerius, Aurelius, Claudius Constantinus), was b. at Naissus in Upper Moesia (Nish in Serbia) 27 Feb. 274, son of Constantius Chlorus and S. Helen. Educated at the court of Diocletian and Galerius, he was, after the sudden death of his father (25 July 306), proclaimed Augustus by the legions at York in Britain (Caesar, 1 March, 307). He married Faustina, the daughter of Maximinian; he continued the mild policy of his father towards the Christians; he was gained for Christ in the conflict with Maxentius, by an apparition of Christ in a dream and of a cross in the sky (legendary account of Eusebius of Caesarea) and by the victorious battle at the Milvian bridge, 28 Oct., 312; he was instructed, but according to a custom of the time, not baptized. In 313, he issued the Edict of Milan, which gave immunity to the clergy, proclaimed the celebration of Sunday, etc. He founded churches and slowly but steadily repressed paganism. To his new residence, Constantinople, he gave the character of a Christian city. He was much interested in theological and ecclesiastical questions and took energetic measures against the extreme Arians, Donatists, and Novatians. Constantine was a pious and moral man. The execution of his adversaries (Maximinian, Licinius) was politically necessary and morally justified. The so-called "murder" of his son Crispus and his wife Fausta (suspected of adultery) was a precipitate act. D. at Achyron, near Nicomedia, 22 May, 337, baptized on his deathbed "with Arian consolations and Arian sacraments," by the semi-Arian Bp. Eusebius of Nicomedia, and buried at Constantinople in the church of the Apostles. The Oriental Churches venerate him as a saint (for his merits); 21 May, full office (Ss. Constantine and Helen). In the Latin Church his cult is unknown. In the Coptic Church 24 March and 8 Nov. In the Melchite Church 22 May. His name is daily mentioned in the Armenian Mass. Max. 198. —W.W.—Buch.—C. E.—L. S.—Dand., III, 5.

Cornelius, M., Pope, 251–253, a native of Rome. His election, after an interregnum of 14 months, and the readmission to communion of those who had fallen under Decius, gave rise to the Novatian schism; in 252, he held a synod against the Novatians at Rome. His correspondence with S. Cyprian of Carthage on the question of the reconciliation of the fallen contains important proofs for the Roman primacy. Exiled to Centumcellae, he died, in June, 253, and was buried, 14 Sept., in the catacomb of S. Callistus. F. 14 Sept. Rom. Mart.; originally 14 Sept. simpl., by Pius V sem. 16 Sept., dp. at Rome. Cosmas and Damian, Mm.; twin brothers, b. in Arabia; they practiced medicine at the seaport of Aegae (now Ayass) in Cilicia. Because they accepted no pay for their services from the poor, they are called "Anargyroi," "Silverless." In this way they converted many to Christ. When the persecution of Diocletian broke out, they were imprisoned by the Prefect Lysias and, after various torments, beheaded, in 303. Their acts relate that their mother Theodora and their brothers Anthimus, Leontius, and Euprepus died as martyrs with them. At a later date myths and fables grew up about their story. From Aegae their cult came to Cyrrhus in northern Syria and to Constantinople. Emperor Justinian built several churches under their invocation. At Rome Pope Symmachus (d. 514) erected a basilica in their honor in two ancient pagan buildings. Their names were the last to be received into the Canon of the Mass. F. in the Latin Church, 21 Sept. sem. In the diocese of Oria (Apulia), F. of their patronage Thursday after 4th Sunday after Easter. dp. maj. They are minor patrons of Bohemia, dp. maj. In the Syrian Ch. 1 July 1 cl. In the Coptic Ch., 18 Nov. full office and 16 June. In the Visigoth rite of Spain 17 Oct. The Greeks distinguish three pairs of saints called "Cosmas and Damian"; I: Roman martyrs, stoned under Carinus, F. full office, 1 July. II: Arabian martyrs at Aegae, full office, 17 Oct. III: Martyrs in "Asia," full office, 1 Nov. This multiplication, however, is an obvious error, arising from various feasts celebrated in honor of the one pair in various churches. They are patrons of druggists, physicians, barbers, dentists, etc., against hernia and pestilence. Their name is daily commemorated in the Roman and in the Greek Mass. Lins. 256. P. B.—Luc.—C. E.—L. Cosmas of Jerusalem (Hagiopolites), or of Majuma, Bp., C., Greek liturgical poet (melodos), second only to S. John of Damascus, whose foster brother he was. Both were educated by an older Cosmas, a Sicilian, and took the monastic habit together in the Laura of S. Sabas, near Jerusalem. In 763, Cosmas was appointed bishop of Majuma, near Gaza. His "canons" (liturgical poems) are more remarkable for splendor of form than depth of thought. He is called "the Oriental Adam of S. Victor." D. about 781. F. 14 Oct. full office in the Greek Church. H. L.—L. S.

* Cosmas (Cosmos) II, probably the 54th Coptic patriarch of Alexandria, end of 8th century. An image of Mary in the desert church of S. Crispinus, deacon, at Rome; v. S. Crispus, 27 June.

Crispinus and Crispinianus, Mm., at Soissons, France. According to the spurious acts (written from popular tradition, about 649) they were noble Romans and Christians, who, during the persecution of Diocletian, retired to Soissons and learned the cobbler's trade to support themselves; whilst they made shoes for the poor, they actively preached the faith. Therefore, during the campaign of Maximin against the Bagaudae, under the notorious Rictiovarus, they were tortured and beheaded, in 285. Their relics were elevated by Bp. Anseric, in 649; some of the bones were brought to Rome (S. Lawrence in Panisperna, 9th century), others to Osnabrück (8th century). The adoption of the Roman Calendar, in which 25 October (their day) is occupied by the feast of Ss. Chrysanthus and Daria, has caused the festival of Ss. Crispinus and Crispinianus, which during the Middle Ages had spread to all the dioceses north of the Alps, to fall into desuetude. They are the recognized patrons of shoemakers, cobblers, harness makers, and tanners and are often represented with the tools of their trade or with strips of leather in their hands. F. 25 Oct. Rom. Cuthbert of Lindisfarne, bishop, C., and "Wonder Worker of Britain." He was b. about 635, probably of Saxon parents, in Northumberland on the river Tweed (Card. Moran defends his Irish birth); as a boy he was a shepherd near Melrose; about 658, he became a monk at Melrose under abbot S. Eata, was ordained priest, and sent out to preach, at the same time practicing the austerities of the Celtic saints. For a while he was steward (guest-master) at Ripon, but when the Roman usages were adopted there, he with other monks returned to Melrose. In 664, he was appointed prior in place of S. Boisil. S. Eata, the abbot, and S. Cuthbert, without reserve, adopted the decisions of the synod of Whitby (664) regarding the Celtic traditions and took pains to introduce the Roman rite into the Celtic community of Lindisfarne. Not all the rebels left with S. Colman; some monks still remained who obstinately clung to their ancient customs; Cuthbert reasoned with them daily in the meetings of the Chapter; by patience and moderation he won over the entire community. In 676, he retired to Farne island, to devote himself to a life of contemplation, but, in 684, was elected bishop of Lindisfarne, drawn from his solitude and consecrated at York by S. Theodore of Canterbury (685). At Christmas, 686, he resigned his see and returned to his cell on Farne island. D. 20 March, 687, and was buried in Lindisfarne cathedral; the miracles at his tomb were so numerous that he was called the "Wonder Worker of Britain." During the Danish invasion, in 833, his relics were taken from Lindisfarne and brought to Durham; in 999, they were transferred to the Durham cathedral. His shrine at Durham was one of the most frequented in Catholic England and more than four centuries after his death his body was found to be still incorrupt. It was hidden at the time of the so-called Reformation and was found in 1827. He is patron of sailors. F. all over England and Scotland, 20 March dp. Cyprian and Justina, Mm. Cyprian, a pagan necromancer and astrologer, tried to seduce the Christian virgin Justina; when his efforts proved unsuccessful, he became a Christian and did penance for his sins. He was elected bishop of Antioch in Pisidia and died a martyr by the sword, with Justina and Theoctistus, at Nicomedia in Bithynia, in 304. Their fabulous acts are a religious romance of the 4th century, possibly founded on facts. S. Gregory of Nazianzus identifies S. Cyprian of Antioch with S. Cyprian of Carthage. The story, in fact, may be a romance, founded on the great Cyprian's conversion and worked up with material from various sources into a wonderful story for the amusement of the Greeks. S. Justina may have been a martyr of Antioch. Relics of these saints are in the Vatican Basilica, and in the Baptistry of S. John in the Lateran, Rome. F. in the whole Latin Ch. (post-Gregorian) 26 Sept. simplex. In the Greek and Syrian Churches 2 Oct. full office in the Coptic Church 4 Oct. Rb. Sl. 15 Feb. and 15 June. H. L.—P. B.—L. S.—Syn. (18 Sept.) 37—Rams.

Cyprian (Thascius Caecilius Cyprianus), M., Bp. of Carthage; b. of the Punic race in Africa, about 190; he taught rhetoric at Carthage; comparatively late in life he was converted to the Christian faith by the priest Caecilianus, was baptized (in 246) and gave his two estates to the poor. In 247, he was ordained priest; in 248, consecrated bishop of Carthage. During the Decian persecution he governed his flock from a place of refuge. Before the persecution Cyprian, looking at the question of the reconciliation of the fallen in the abstract, had been inclined to the stern view that those who had denied Christ should forever remain outside the pale of the visible Church. But when he was brought face to face with the question as a practical one and saw the agony of contrition, he could not but feel that the Blood of Jesus Christ must reach and heal these, and he adopted the Roman practice: of the numerous renegades he promised to reconcile the worthy, but he earnestly disapproved the misuse of the commendatory petitions (libelli) of the martyrs. Intolerance against the neophyte Bishop Cyprian and his leniency to the fallen gave rise to a formal schism of the deacon Felicissimus, who was excommunicated before the persecution was over. When Cyprian returned to Carthage (April, 251) he excommunicated all the leaders of the schism and issued new instructions respecting the distribution of alms and the re-admission of the fallen in accordance with the Roman practice; but the anti-bishop Fortunatus and the priest Novatus continued the schism. In the dispute between Pope S. Cornelius and the anti-pope Novatian Cyprian energetically stood up for Cornelius. When, in 255 and 256, three African synods rejected the baptism conferred by heretics, Pope Stephen remonstrated, but Cyprian insisted on his view, without breaking the ecclesiastical union with Rome; he also opposed other measures of Stephen. His conviction of the necessary oneness of the Church, founded on the Rock of Peter, appears more striking from his boldness and insistency in maintaining his own erroneous views on the validity of baptism conferred by heretics, to which he sought in vain to convert Pope St. Stephen. When the persecution of Valerian broke out, (Aug., 257) Cyprian was exiled to Curubis, but brought back to Carthage and beheaded, 14 Sept., 258. His writings treat chiefly of the persecutions, the fallen, infant baptism, etc. He is patron against pestilence. Anciently his feast was celebrated on 14 Sept. simpl.; by Pius V sem. 16 Sept. for the Latin Ch. He is Titular of the cathedral of Carthage; at Grosseto minor patron, dp. maj. In the Russian Church 31 Aug. Cyriaca, V., M. daughter of S. Dorotheus, 26 July.

Cyriaca, M., a Roman matron. She lived on the Mons Coelius, where the church of S. M. in Dominica now stands. S. Lawrence is said to have been her almoner before he was appointed archdeacon. Under Decius, in 251, she was scourged to death. The cemetery of S. Cyriaca (in agro Verano) is on land formerly owned by S. Cyriaca. Her relics are in S. Lorenzo fuori le Mura and in S. M. in Portico, where her F. is celebrated 21 Aug. Rom. Mart. R. Sott., 174—H. L.

Cyriacus (Quiriacus), Bp., M., patron of Ancona. The apocryphal acts claim that this Cyriacus, whose name was Judas, when still a Jew, revealed to S. Helena the place where the Holy Cross was concealed, that he was baptized, consecrated bishop of Jerusalem (after Macarius), and martyred under Julian the Apostate. Galla Placidia is said to have brought his bones to Ancona. A bishop Cyriacus of Jerusalem did not exist in the 4th century. See S. Judas, 18 Oct. Probably this S. Cyriacus was bishop of Ancona and lost his life on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, or he was identical with Judas, the 15th bishop of Jerusalem (d. in 133). F. 4 May Rom. Mart. At Ancona dp. 1 cl. oct. Cyril (Cyrillus), Patriarch of Alexandria and Doctor of the Church, C.; b. at Alexandria, about 376; he was a nephew of the Patriarch Theophilus; trained in the ascetic life by monks in the desert. In 403, he accompanied his uncle to the "Synod of the Oak," held at Constantinople, which deposed S. John Chrysostom. 18 Oct., 412, he succeeded Theophilus in the see of Alexandria. One of his first acts was to close the churches of the Novatians and to expel the Jews, which latter act aroused the jealousy of Orestes, the prefect of Egypt. 500 monks from the Nitrian desert came to defend Cyril against Orestes. (See S. Ammonius). He was unsparing in his efforts to eradicate the last vestiges of paganism, but that he was an abettor of the murder of Hypatia, the pagan woman philosopher, is an unsupported calumny. He strongly opposed Nestorianism and denounced it to Pope Celestine; he acted as papal delegate for the Orient in this affair and presided at the Ecumenical Council of Ephesus, in 431. The rest of his life was given to the defence of the Catholic doctrine of the hypostatic union of the two natures in Christ ("the Divine Person suffered in his humane nature") and of the dignity of Mary as the Mother of God. He was a man of fiery spirit and great force of character; more patience and diplomacy on his part might have prevented many of his troubles. In spite of his own firm grasp of the truth, the whole of his patriarchate fell, a few years after his death, into the heresy of Monophysism (Monophysitism), based partly on obscure parts of his writings, and could never be regained for the Catholic faith. The Monophysites consider him their chief Doctor. He died 28 (or 9?) June, 444. His relics are in the hands of the heretical Copts at Alexandria. The Carmelites claim that he took their habit on Mt. Carmel, confounding him with S. Cyril of Jerusalem. F. formerly 28 Jan. Rom. Cyrl, Bp. of Jerusalem and Doctor of the Church, C., a man of gentle spirit, eminently a peacemaker. B. about 315; ordained priest, in 345, and, after the death of Maximus (350), bishop of Jerusalem; soon the conflict began with the Arian Archbishop Acacius of Caesarea over the honorary privileges given to the see of Jerusalem by the Nicene Council; twice, in 358 and 360, he was deposed and exiled by Arian synods. Emperor Julian recalled him, in 361, but Valens, in 367, sent him to his third exile; when he returned after the death of Valens, he found his diocese rent by schism and corrupted by heresy. During his administration occurred the apparition of a luminous cross in the sky (7 May, 351) and the failure of Julian's malignant attempt to rebuild the Jewish temple (362). In 381, he assisted at the Council of Constantinople. His most famous work are his catechetical lectures, in which he teaches the Divinity of the Son of God, judiciously avoiding the term "Consubstantial," and the real presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist. Carmel, took the religious habit, and was elected third Prior General, 1221-1224. He is often confounded with both Cyril of Jerusalem and Cyril of Alexandria. Cyril, M., at Alexandria; v. S. Tryphon, 3 July.

Cyril (Constantine), Bp., C., Apostle of the Slavs. B. at Thessalonica (Saloniki), in 827, brother of S. Methodius; he went to Constantinople as a young man and was educated by Photius at the imperial court along with the youthful Emperor Michael. Having received Holy Orders, he was appointed palace librarian. Soon after he retired to a little monastery, where he took the name of Cyril, but left again to give lectures in philosophy. In 851, with Methodius, he retired to the monastery of Mt. Olympus (Bithynia); in 858, both were sent to evangelize the Chazars. Having organized the Church there, they retired to the Crimea, where they found what they believed to be the relics of Pope S. Clement; they brought them to Constantinople, A.D. 864. Emperor Michael sent the brothers to Rostislav, Duke of Moravia, who had asked for Greek priests to draw the Moravian Church away from German influence (Salzburg). They introduced the Slav language into sermon and liturgy. That this measure was approved by Hadrian II, is a fiction. Cyril translated the Scriptures and liturgy (Roman?) and by inventing a special alphabet (Glagolitic) became the founder of Slav literature. After an activity of three years and a half, the brothers went to Rome, to have their work authorized, bringing with them the alleged relics of S. Clement. Hadrian II received them kindly; Cyril took the religious habit and died, 14 Feb., 869. His relics are in S. Clemente (v. S. Methodius). F. 14 Feb. Rom. Mart. The Russians keep their F. 11 May; the Servians, 25 Aug. (now 11 May); the Bulgarians, 17 July. Cyrus and John, Mm., in Egypt, the most celebrated martyrs of the Coptic Church. They belong to the Greek "Anargyroi" (silverless Mm.), Cyrus was a Christian physician at Canopus, Egypt; to escape arrest, he fled into the Egypto-Arabian desert, where the catechumen John, a soldier, attached himself to him. They came to Alexandria to comfort the imprisoned Christian virgins Theopista, Theodora, and Theodoxia, but were beheaded a few days after them, 31 Jan., 312. By order of Archbishop Cyril their relics were brought from the church of S. Mark at Alexandria to Menuthis, two miles from Canopus (Mareotis), near an ancient temple of Isis. Their tomb and church became a famous shrine, where S. Sophronius of Jerusalem was cured. After the destruction of Abukir (Menuthis), about 634, the relics were brought to Rome (S. Passera on the road to Porto). F. 31 Jan. Rom. Mart. dm. at Rome in S. M. in Via Lata. Damasus, C., "the Virgin Doctor of the Virgin Church," Pope, Oct. 366–384. B. at Rome, of Spanish parents, he served the church of S. Lawrence; in 355 he became archdeacon of Pope S. Liberius. In 366, he was legally elected by a majority to fill the chair of S. Peter, but a small minority put up the deacon Ursicinus against him and resorted to violence; these dissensions continued even after Valentinian III had banished Ursicinus to Cologne. Damasus held synods at Rome, in 368 and 369, against the Apollinarists and Macedonians. He safeguarded the authority of the Latin Patriarchate in Illyricum by establishing the Roman Vicariate of Thessalonica (S. Aescholius). At a synod (in 379) he defined the Canon of Holy Scripture, sent delegates to the Ecumenical Council of Constantinople (in 381); raised the standard of discipline, restored churches, opened the entrances to the Catacombs, built stairs, light shafts, walls and decorated the chambers and tombs with paintings and inscriptions. He shortened the ancient liturgy for the Roman Patriarchate, thus becoming the father of the Roman Mass. A cultured man, as is seen from his verses, he was the great patron of S. Jerome, who, under his direction, translated into Latin or revised the current versions of Holy Scripture. D. at Rome, 10 Dec., 384, and was buried in a small basilica on the Road to Ardea (his crypt was found in 1902); his relics now rest under the high altar of San Lorenzo in Damaso. Daniel, M., at Nicopolis; v. S. Leontius, 16 July.

Daniel, one of the four Great Prophets. He belonged to the tribe of Juda and was of noble, perhaps of royal, descent. When still a youth he was taken as a captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, 605 B.C.; educated with Ananias, Azarias, and Misael at the king's court, he received the name of Balthassar; he remained faithful to the letter of the Jewish law and rose in favor with the king when he interpreted his dream of the colossal statue; after the death of Nebuchadnezzar (561), he lived in retirement, but was again brought to public notice at the scene of revelry in Balthassar's palace ("Mane, Thekel, Phares"). He became one of the chief ministers of King Cyrus, which office he retained under the viceroy (underking) Darius the Mede. Tradition holds that the holy Prophet did not return to Judea with his fellow-countrymen, but remained in Babylon. After Daniel's miraculous preservation in the lion's den, Darius published a decree, that all should honor the God of Daniel. D. in Persia during the reign of Cyrus the Persian (537-529). In youth he was a monk near Maratha, then a hermit in the temple of Philamporus; in 452, 47 years old, under Emperor Leo, after a short stay with S. Simeon Stylites, who did penance on the top of a pillar near Antioch, he resolved to imitate him, went to Constantinople and erected his column at Anaplus on the Bosphorus, four miles north of Constantinople. Against his will Patriarch Gennadius ordained him priest on the column, which he left only once, to intercede for Patriarch Acacius and to wring from the usurper Basiliscus an orthodox decree. As adviser of Emperors Leo and Zeno he seems to have favored the famous Henoticon of the latter. Having spent 33 years on his pillar, he died about 490, and was buried at the foot of the column. * David, of Carrhae, a Syrian saint. F. 4 Feb. and 25 Sept. Rb. Sl.

David (Dewi), Bp., C., patron of Wales and perhaps the most illustrious of the ancient Welsh bishops. His very elaborate legend, composed by Giraldu Cambrensis, is unreliable. He was a son of Sanddhe (Sant), prince of Ceretica in Wales, and S. Non; b. about 495 at Hen Mynyw, Cardigan, and educated at Ty Gwyn (near port Mawr, Whitland) by S. Paulinus (Peulan). Later on he was at Caerworgan with S. Illtyd. Elected abbot of Ty Gwyn, he removed the site of the monastery to Rosnat (Menevia) in a ravine of the Allun. Like most abbots of his time he was promoted to the episcopate (but not by the patriarch John III of Jerusalem.) He attended the synod of Breff, convened by S. Dyfrig, in 545, to suppress the Pelagian heresy, and, in 569, the "Synod of Victory," in which the canons and decrees of David for the regulation of the British Church were ratified. There is no evidence to show that S. David was ever bishop of Caerleon. When St. David won his great victory over the Saxons, he is said to have ordered every one of his soldiers to place a leek in his cap, for the sake of distinction; in memory whereof the Welsh wear a leek on 1 March. (Bra.) D. at Mynyw (Menevia), 1 March, 589 (not 544). His relics may have been brought to Glastonbury, in 962. His cult was approved by Callistus II, in 1120. His empty tomb at Menevia was a favorite shrine ("two pilgrimages to Menevia being equal to one to Rome.") It was rediscovered in the spring of 1922. He is called "Sovereign over the Saints of the island of Britain." F. 1 March, Rom. Mart., dp. in all England, dp. 1 cl. in Wales.—Ftpr., 129.—Moran, 27.—B. G., II, 285.—L. S.

David, Prophet, the second and greatest King of Israel. He was the youngest of the seven sons of Isai the Bethlehemite, of the tribe of Judah. After Saul's rejection he was anointed king by Samuel; by his victory over Goliath he gained the hearts of the people and the intimate friendship of Jonathan. Persecuted by the jealous King Saul, he attached himself to King Achis of Gath. After Saul's death (1011) he was elected king by the tribe of Judah; after the death of Ishboseth (1004) he was recognized by the entire nation. In 1004, he conquered Jerusalem, which he raised to the rank of a royal residence; in 995, he subdued Damascus and Hamath; in 994, the Edomites and Ammonites. The crime of adultery committed with Bethsabee and the murder of Urias, were followed by a series of heavy blows: the death of the son begotten in adultery, the violation of Thamar by Ammon (991), the killing of Ammon by Absalom (989), the revolt and death of Absalom (980). During the rest of his life David made preparations for the building of the Temple and regulated the services for the priests and levites. Chastened by sorrow and rich in virtue and piety, equally great as king, prophet, and poet, he died in 972 B.C. The tomb of David was recognized in Jerusalem as late as the second century of our era, when Hadrian attempted to destroy it; it is still pointed out. Josephus narrates miracles wrought there, especially on the occasion of the pillage attempted by Herod. David is the patron of poets and musicians. F. 29 Dec. Rom. Mart. dp. at Jerusalem; dp. maj. at Fiesole. The Greeks and Maronites keep his F. Sunday after Christmas; the Armenians commemorate him 22 Dec., the Copts, 19 Dec., the Melchites on 26 Dec. Demetrius, monk, M., at Messina; v. S. Nicander, 25 Sept.

Demetrius (Dimitri, Mita), Megalomartyr of Saloniki, after S. George the most popular military martyr of the Greek Church. The legend makes him a citizen of Thessalonica (Saloniki). He was arrested for preaching Christ and (without trial) pierced with a lance in the public baths by order of Emperor Maximinian, in 306. A later legend says that he was proconsul of Achaia and consul or mayor of Thessalonica. He is probably identical with the deacon Demetrius of Sirmium (Jugoslavia). Leontius, prefect of Illyria, who enriched Thessalonica with some of his relics, transplanted the cult from Sirmium to this city. He built a basilica in his honor at Sirmium and another at Thessalonica; probably the relics were at Sirmium; perhaps, through the efforts of Leontius, they were transferred to Thessalonica. Demetrius became patron and defender of Saloniki, and his church, from the 5th century onward, was one of the most famous shrines of Christianity. This basilica, the finest in Christendom, was destroyed by fire in 1917. Popular fancy has metamorphosed the simple deacon into a military hero. He is called "Myrobletes," i. e., pouring forth ointment, because a miraculous oil is said to flow from his relics. The Greek Emperor Michael IV obtained a notable victory over the Bulgarians, which he ascribed to the intercession of S. Demetrius. On account of the many miracles that have taken place at his shrine at Saloniki, he has for centuries been in great honor in the East; his name is frequently given to children in baptism and his office is one of the most magnificent in the liturgical books of the East. F. 8 Oct. Rom. Mart.; at Parenzo in Dalmatia dp. (rel. in Cathedral). Demetrius, 12th patriarch of Alexandria, 189-231. He had been married and was consecrated against his will to succeed S. Julianus. At his accession there was only one see in Egypt; he established three others, S. Heracles 20 more. He deserved highly of the Church of Alexandria; he combated the Gnostic Basilicians and called able teachers (Pantaenus, Origen, Clement) to the catechetical school. Later on he excommunicated and exiled Origen, not through jealousy, as S. Jerome says, but for heresy and for his uncanonical ordination at Caesarea. He knew the secret sins of men. F. 9 Oct. Deogratias, C., Bp. of Carthage. S. Quodvultdeus having died in 441, Deogratius after a vacancy of 15 years, was elected to fill the see of Carthage, 24 Oct., 456. After the sack of Rome by the Vandal king Geiseric, D. succored the prisoners, who had been brought from Rome to Carthage, even selling the sacred vessels of the altar to restore them to liberty. He moreover fed and housed them and visited the sick among them. But being already very old, he did not resist long the many calls on his endurance, and after only one year of such strenuous labors, died in 457. Victor of Vita, the historian, enlarges on his merits and holiness. During his administration the African Church enjoyed comparative peace. D. 5 Jan., 457. F. 22 March Rom. Deruvian, or Dyfan, M., 2d century. He was one of the company (Elfan, Ffagan, and Medwy) said to have been sent by Pope Eleutherius to Britain at the request of King Lucius. The story is more than doubtful. Dyfan was certainly a Briton, as were Medwy and Elfan. Churches dedicated to these saints are in the neighborhood of Llandaff, and there only; consequently it is probable that these saints have existed; they also may have visited Rome. We may conclude from the church dedicated to S. Dyfan, Merthyr Dyfan, that he suffered martyrdom. L. S. App. 221. F. 14 May.

Dictinus, C., Bp. of Astorga in Spain. B. of Greek parents (son of Symphonius). At first he was an adherent of Priscillianism, which he defended in writings; influenced by S. Ambrose, he recalled his errors at a synod at Toledo, in 400; soon after he was elected bishop of Astorga. D. 24 July, 420. F. 2 June, dp. maj. in diocese of Astorga. H. L.

Didacus (Diego, Diaz), C., a Franciscan laybrother. B. at San-Nicolas in Andalusia, diocese of Sevilla; he took the Franciscan habit at Arrizafa. Although uneducated, he, by divine grace, possessed great spiritual knowledge; he was equally distinguished for humility, zeal, and charity. Sent to the Canary Islands in company with a priest, he was appointed guardian of the new Fortoventura monastery. After his return to Spain he went to Rome, in 1450, to assist at the canonization of S. Bernardine and, when the pestilence broke out there, he nursed the sick at Ara Coeli and healed many by his prayers. His chief devotion was to Our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament. D. 12 Nov., 1463, at Alcalá de Henares, Spain. F. 12 Nov. Rom.

Mart.: canonized, 2 June 1588. F. 13 Nov. in the Latin Church dp. maj. at Alcalá (Madrid), and by the three families of S. Francis; Tr. rel. Rogation Monday. Biogr—H. L.—P. B.

Didacus (Diego) (B.), of Azevedo (Acebes), C., O. Cist. As provost of the cathedral of Osma, he obtained a canonry for S. Dominic, in 1195; was elected bishop of Osma in 1201, reformed his chapter, and gave to it the rule of S. Augustine. Sent to Rome and the South of France by King Alphonse of Castile, he, with S. Dominic, preached to the Albigenses. Together with S. Dominic he wrote the rule of the Dominican Order, which he was prohibited from joining by Pope Innocent III. D. 30 Dec., 1207. F. 6 Feb. P. B.

Didacus (B.), of Cadiz, C., O. Cap., missionary and "Apostle of Spain." B. at Cadiz, 29 March, 1743, he took the solemn vows 31 March, 1759, in the Capuchin Order at Seville; he evangelized all Spain, especially Andalusia; he is called "the Apostle of the Blessed Trinity and of Our Lady, the Mother of the Good Shepherd." Most of his time he spent in the confessional. D. 24 March, 1801. Beatified 10 Apr., 1894. F. 24 March, dp. maj. O. Capp. at Cadiz and Seville. Seeb. 332.—Kempf. 78.

Didacus (B.), Carvalho, S. J., M., in Japan; b. at Coimbra, Portugal, in 1578; he joined the Society of Jesus, in 1594, and was sent to India in 1600, where he was ordained priest. He went to Japan, in 1609, and worked on Camacusa island and at Meaco. When, in 1614, the persecution broke out, he retired to Macao, but returned to Japan in 1615, and penetrated as far north as Yesso. Arrested at Oroxia, with nine companions, he was twice immersed naked in icy water until he died, 22 Feb., 1624. Beatified 6 July, 1867. F. 25 Feb., S. J. at Macao, and in Japan. Jap.—Seeb.

Dionysius, M., at Thessalonica; v. Ingenianus, 1 Apr.

Dionysius of Corinth, Bp. He succeeded S. Primus about 170. He was of great authority in the ancient Church. Eusebius calls his letters to different churches "Catholic," i. e., applicable to the universal Church. In consequence of religious controversies he wrote to the Lacedaemonians, Athenians, Nicomedians, Cnossians, Romans, to Gortyna and Amastris. Of all these letters only a few fragments have come down to us. S. Dionysius was in regular communication with S. Soter and other Popes of his age; he repressed the Marcianites and other philosophising heretics of his time. The Greeks honor him as a martyr, the Latins as a confessor. D. about 180. His relics are said to have been sent to S. Denis, Paris, by Innocent III, in 1215, where he was confounded with the Areopagite and the first bishop of Paris. F. 8 Apr. Rom. Dionysius, patriarch of Alexandria, called "the Great." B. at Alexandria, end of the 2nd century, of pagan parents; he was converted and attached himself to Origen; in 231 he was appointed head of the catechetical school of Alexandria. On the death of Heraclas he was elected bishop of his native city. During the persecution under Decius he was persuaded to retire to a place of safety; under Valerian he was exiled, first to Kephro in Libya, then to the Mareotis, but recalled in 261. Dionysius in stormy times was an ornament of the see of Alexandria, which he raised to ecumenical importance; he was a man of action rather than of theory. His ardent zeal for the conversion of the pagans, and for the reunion of the schismatics, the firmness with which he combatted error (Sabellianism, Chiliasm), the moderation he showed towards those who had fallen, his charity, which embraced the whole Church, combined to obtain for him, from S. Athanasius, the epithet "Master of the Catholic Church." But in writing against Sabellianism he used ambiguous expressions which the Arians afterwards exploited in their favor. Only fragments of his writings have been preserved to us by Eusebius. D. about 264. F. 17 Nov. Rom. Mart. dp. in Egypt (Lat.) Comm.; 3 Oct. MGr.; 5 Oct. Mz. In the Coptic Church 31 Aug. Ruin. 222.—C. E.—W.W.—L. S.—All. 57.—Eg. 77.

Dionysius, Faustus, Cajus, Petrus, Paulus, Eusebius, Chaeremon, and two companions, Mm., at Rome according to the Roman Mart. 3 Oct.; they suffered much under Decius and were at last beheaded under Valerianus. These martyrs (unfortunately inserted into the Rom. Mart. by Baronius) stand in no relation to Rome; they are identical with certain martyrs of Alexandria in Egypt: the Bp. Dionysius (3 Oct.), the deacon Faustus (19 Nov. Rom. Mart.) and Cajus (20 Nov.) Peter and Paul are mentioned by S. Dionysius of Alexandria as fellow-sufferers exiled with him to Libya. Some of them were stoned to death; others died in prison. Rams.—H. L.—Eg. 84.

Dionysius the Areopagite, M., Bp. of Athens. He was the judge of the Areopagus who was converted by S. Paul (Acts XVII, 34) and who, according to Dionysius of Corinth, was bishop of Athens. The Menology of Basil says that he suffered at Athens, being burned to death under Domitian. In the Middle Ages two errors arose in connection with him: (1) After Abbot Hilduin of S. Denis (d. 842) wrote his spurious life of S. Dionysius, Latins and Greeks confounded the Areopagite with Dionysius, the first bishop of Paris. The Church of Paris claims that the Areopagite left the church of Athens to S. Publius of Malta, went to Rome and, with others, was sent to Gaul by S. Clement I. (2) To the Areopagite is erroneously ascribed a series of mystical writings which at first were rejected by the Church, but enjoyed great authority during the Middle Ages and exercised a strong influence on theological science, until they were proved to be spurious (written end of 5th century by some unknown genius). F. in Greek, Melchite, Syrian and Coptic Churches 3 Oct. full office. Nilles. Cal. Man. In the Armenian Church his feast with that of all the disciples of S. Paul is celebrated on the Thursday after the fifth Sunday after the Exaltation of the Cross. In the Roman Mart., 9 Oct.; at Athens d. 1 cl. oct. (Lat.) On 9 Oct. he is principal patron also at Cotrone in Calabria; the apocryphal tradition relates that on his way to Rome he landed at the Capo delle Colonne, near Cotrone, and there left an image of the Bl. Virgin. He is commemorated daily in some Syrian liturgies. C. E.—W.W.—P. B.—H. L.—L. S.

Dionysius (B.), Januarius, Faustinus, Martialis, Privatus, Heraclas, Julianus, and Pelagia, Mm., at Antioch. F. 8 Oct. H. L.

Dionysius (Denis), M., Bp. of Paris, one of the 14 Holy Helpers. According to Gregory of Tours he was born in Italy and, with six other bishops, was sent from Rome to Gaul, (about 240), settled on an island in the Seine, and restored Christian worship there. He was beheaded at Paris with the priest Rusticus and the deacon Eleutherius, 9 Oct., 250 (under Decius). Abbot Hilduin, who (in 825) forged the Acts of the Patron of his abbey (S. Denis), confounded him with S. Dionysius the Areopagite, as the Roman Breviary and the Greek Meneae still do. Before the revolution his relics were at S.

Denis; they were saved by a monk and, in 1821 (22 Apr.) were restored to the monastery. Some writers claim that the relics of S. Denis of Paris were brought to Ratisbon (in 893) and those of the Areopagite to S. Denis (Paris) in 1215 (from Rome); that consequently the bones found in 1821 are those of the Areopagite; probably, however, both the translation of the bishop of Paris to Ratisbon and that of the Areopagite to Paris are unhistorical. He is patron against headache (because he is said to have carried his own head from Montmartre to S. Denis) and against rabies. F. 9 Oct. Rom. Mart. A miraculous intervention—a dazzling beam of light from a quarter of the heavens opposite to that in which was the sun—is said to have startled his executioners and to have procured him a brief respite in his agony. In the end he was burned to death by the pressing of his body between red hot metal plates. This is all that has come down to our time respecting S. Dioscurus. * Dioscurus I. 25th patriarch of Alexandria, 444–451. He had been archdeacon under S. Cyril; was the leader of the "Cyrillian" party and the dominant spirit of the "Robber Synod" of Ephesus (448), entering into communion with Eutyches after the latter's condemnation. Convicted of Monophysitism by the Council of Chalcedon (451), he was banished to Gangra in Paphlagonia, where he died 4 Sept., 454. The whole of Egypt revered him as the true representative of Cyrillian teaching and from this time forth the patriarchate of Alexandria was lost to the Church. Dioscurus is the chief Doctor of the Egyptian Monophysites. He has a F. with a full office, 4 Sept., in the Coptic and Abyssinian churches. Doctors of the Church. The Church has given this appellation to certain ecclesiastical writers for their orthodox doctrine, sanctity of life, and eminent erudition. The Latin Church venerates as Doctors (since 1298) the four great Latin Fathers: Ss. Augustine, Ambrose, Jerome, and Gregory and (since 1568) the four great Greek Fathers Ss. Athanasius, Basil, Gregory Nazianzen, and John Chrysostom. To these have been added: Ss. Thomas Aquinas (1568), Anselm (1720), Isidore (1722), Peter Chrysologus (1729), Leo I (1754), Peter Damian (1828), Bernard (1830), Hilary (1851), Alphonsus Liguori (1871), Francis de Sales (1877), Cyril of Alexandria, Cyril of Jerusalem (1883), John of Damascus (1890), Bede (1899) and Ephraem (1920). The Spaniards add to this number Ss. Fulgentius and S. Leander, the Franciscans S. Antony (because he introduced the study of theology into their Order).—The Greek Church honors only five Doctors, the three hierarchs: Basil, Gregory (Naz.), and John Chrysostom, and the Alexandrians: Athanasius and Cyril.—The Catholic Syrians add to the four Latin and the four Greek Fathers: Ss. Ephraem, Isaac the Elder, Leo I, John of Damascus, Cyril of Alexandria, Cyril of Jerusalem, Epiphanius of Cyprus, and Gregory of Nyssa.—The Catholic Chaldeans (Nill., II, 682) have two feasts in honor of their Doctors: (1) on the 5th Friday after Epiphany; the Greek Doctors: Ss. Polycarp, Eustathius of Antioch, Meletius, Alexander of Jerus., Athanasius, Basil, Cyril of Alex., both Gregories (Naz. and Nyssa), John Chrysostom and Flavianus; (2) on the 6th Friday after Epiphany: the Syrian Doctors: Ephraem, James of Nisibis, James of Serug, Isaac the Great, Isaac of Ninivé, and Maruthas.—The Armenians have 12 Doctors of the Church: Ss. Hierotheus of Athens, Denis the Areopagite, Silvester of Rome, Athanasius, and Cyril of Alex., Ephraem the Syrian, Basil of Caesarea, Gregory of Nyssa, Gregory Nazianzen, Epiphanius of Cyprus, John Chrysostom, and Cyril of Jerusalem. (Tond. 38). Besides these Doctors of the universal Church they venerate their own national Doctors: Ss. Mesrop (Mashtoz), Eliseus the historiographer, Moses of Chorene, David the Philosopher, Gregory of Narek, Nerses III, and Nerses of Lambron. (Tond. 37). To the Coptic Christians of Egypt the honorary title of Doctor of the Church is unknown.

Dominica (Domnach, Drusa), V., M., sister of S. Indractus, of royal Irish blood; they, for a time, lived at Tamar in Cornwall; she was killed, with her brother and six companions, after a pilgrimage to Rome, at Shapwick near Glastonbury, about 854. Their relics are at Glastonbury. F. 8 May. B. H., II, 351.

Dominica, V., sister of S. Agrippinus, bishop of Como; she lived somewhere on Lake Como. F. 13 May. H. L.

Dominica (in English) S. Sunday; in Greek S. Cyriaca), V., M. According to the Greek tradition she suffered and was beheaded at Nicomedia in Bithynia. The lessons of her office (approved by the S. Rit. C.) claim that she was born in the Campagna (Italy), was tortured and beheaded by command of Diocletian on the banks of the Euphrates, and that angels carried her head and body from there to Tropea in Calabria. The Church of Tropea, however, claims that she was born, lived, and died at Tropea. Yet she was unknown at Tropea before the 16th century. Her lessons are an adaptation from the acts of S. Cyriaca, written by Metaphrastes, 10th century, which are, perhaps, founded on those of S. Euphemia. F. 6 July, Rom. Mart. At Campagna, 2 cl.; at Tropea she is Principal Patron, 6 July, dp.

Dominic de la Calzada, hermit; b. at Victoria in Viscaya, Spain. Because the Benedictines of Valvanera would not receive him, he attached himself to a hermit, then to S. Gregory of Ostia, who was preaching in the Northeast of Spain. After Gregory's death he led a solitary life at Calzada, Rioja; d. 12 May, 1109. F. 12 May, Rom. Mart., sem. in Spain; he is principal patron of Calzada. H. L.—P. B.

Dominic Guzman, C., founder of the Order of Preachers. B. at Calaruega in Old Castile. His father, Felix, however was not a scion of the noble Guzman family; his mother was B. Jane d'Aza. He made his classical studies at the house of his uncle, the archpriest of Gumiel d'Yzan; 1184–1194 he studied philosophy and theology at the University of Palencia, Spain. In 1195, he obtained a canonry in the Regular Chapter of the cathedral of Osma and helped many bishops to restore ecclesiastical discipline among their clergy. In 1203 and 1204 he journeyed with his bishop, Diego d'Azevedo, to the South of France, where the heresy of the Albigenses was then at its height and caused tremendous havoc in Church and State. They were indefatigable in preaching against it. In 1206, S. Dominic founded the convent of Prouille for converted Albigensian women. After the bishop's return to Spain, D. continued the work alone, until 1215. Here, in the South of France, he founded the Order of Preachers, under the vow of perfect poverty, to instruct the country population, preach against the heresies of the age, and wage war against the evils of the time, especially the luxury and indolence of the clergy. Bishop Fulco of Toulouse gave him the church of S. Romanus. The Order of S. Dominic, with that of the Friars Minor, founded by his contemporary, St. Francis of Assisi, was the chief means employed by God to renew the fervor of Christians during the Middle Ages. S. Dominic obtained the approval of his Order personally from Innocent III and, Dec. 22, 1216, from Honorius III. In 1217, he left Languedoc for Rome, where he was allotted the ancient church of S. Sisto for his first monastery. He afterwards gave it to his nuns, the friars passing to S. Sabina on the Aventine, where he met St. Francis. S. Dominic personally established many monasteries in Spain, Italy, and France (1218). He sent missionary friars to Morocco, Portugal, Sweden, Norway, Ireland, England (where the convents of Canterbury, London, and Oxford date from that time), and other countries. The first General Chapter at Bologna (1220) assembled brethren from all countries. S. Dominic died at Bologna, on 6 Aug., 1221; he was canonized, 13 July, 1234. His relics were elevated, 24 May, 1233; they are at S. Domenico, Bologna. F., during the Middle Ages 5 Aug., assigned to 4 Aug. by Paul IV, dp.; dp. maj. since 5 July 1883, in the Latin Church. dp. 1 cl. oct. in the Dominican Order; in the Franciscan Order dp. 1 cl. Dominic the Mailed (Dominicus Loricator), C. B. in Umbria. His ordination to the priesthood was vitiated by simony on the part of his parents (they made a donation of a buckskin to the bishop in order to obtain the ordination of their son); he never exercised his priestly functions and in atonement for the sin of his parents commenced to lead a life of austerity. First he lived in the solitude of Ponterezzoli in Umbria, then he became a disciple of S. Peter Damian at Fontavellano. Next to his skin he wore a steel coat of mail and heavy iron chains; he scourged himself daily, recited the entire psalter at least once a day, and fasted on water and bread. After 1059 he was prior of Spavicino monastery, Frontale, diocese of San Severino. D. 14 Oct., 1060. His body is at the church of S. Anne at Frontale. Dorothea (Dorothy, Dora), V., M. She is said to have been martyred at Caesarea in Cappadocia under Diocletian, with Chrysta (Christete), Callista, and a lawyer named Theophilus. The acts are a romance; historically certain are only her name and martyrdom; all the rest, especially the beautiful miracle of the roses sent by her from paradise

(the garden of her Heavenly Bridegroom) to Theophilus, is the invention of a later period. Some think that S. Dorothea is identical with Dorothea, a rich and highly educated lady of Alexandria, who, according to Rufinus, was exiled by Maximinian. She is highly venerated in the Western Church, but unknown in the East; only the Russians have adopted her feast from the Latins. Her relics are in her own church in Trastevere, Rome. F. 6 Feb. Rom. Dula, M.; v. S. Cyria, 5 Apr.

Dulas-Tatianus, M., at Zephyrium in Cilicia, Asia Minor. Tatianus, surnamed Dulas (servant), was a Cilician from the village of Praetoris, raised a Christian. During the persecution under Diocletian he was imprisoned at Zephyrium for his faith; because he scoffed at the gods, he was savagely scourged back and front, then half roasted on a gridiron and so dismissed to his dungeon. Next day, since he continued to sneer at Apollo, live coals were heaped on his head, after which he was hung up by his wrists and his body was torn with iron rakes, so that his flesh hung down in ribbons and his bowels were exposed. Then the dying man was ordered to be dragged to Tarsus, the capital of Cilicia, to be executed. But Dulas died on the road, a few miles out of Zephyrium. Over his body, thrown into a ditch, a sheepdog is said to have stood guardian, until Christians found and interred his remains. The acts of S. Dulas are trustworthy. F. 15 June, Rom. Mart. Mrt. MGr. Dunstan, Bp., C., one of the greatest saints of Anglo-Saxon England. He was born at Glastonbury, in 925, a son of Heorstan, a Wessex nobleman; at Glastonbury monastery he received his first education from the Irish monks. His uncle, Archbishop Anselm of Canterbury, brought him to the court of King Athelstan; but a few years later Dunstan left the court and took the monastic habit at Winchester monastery, his other uncle, S. Elphege the Bald, being bishop of Winchester. Then he retired to Glastonbury, where, under Irish scholars, he acquired all the learning of his time; he also applied himself to various arts useful for the service of the Church, as painting and music; he became especially skilful as a metal worker. Summoned to the court by King Edmund, in 941, he was appointed abbot of Glastonbury, in 944. In place of the old Celtic rule he introduced the rule of S. Benedict and rebuilt the ancient, but delapidated monastery. A second time he was drawn from the monastery to the court when King Edred, after 946, made him Chancellor of the realm. He labored for the spread of regular observance and insisted on the moral reform of both clergy and laity. Because, in many churches, he replaced the secular canons by monks and introduced irksome reforms, he made enemies on all sides; consequently it was easy for King Edwy to force him into exile to Flanders (Ghent). King Edgar, however, recalled him, in 957, and gave him the bishopric of Worcester, to which, in 959, was added that of London. One year later the archbishopric of Canterbury was conferred on him. The next year Dunstan went to Rome, received the pallium and was appointed papal legate to England by Pope John XII. With the assistance of bishop S. Oswald of York and bishop S. Ethelwold of Winchester, he reformed the English Church. He was the King's chief adviser, and the laws of Edgar, his strict government, the peace and prosperity of England under him, speak for themselves. Upon the accession of King Ethelred, in 978, he retired to Canterbury and died there, 19 May, 988. He was buried at the cathedral; his shrine was destroyed during the Reformation. The relics at Glastonbury are spurious. Until his fame was overshadowed by S. Thomas of Canterbury, he was the favorite saint of the English. He is patron of goldsmiths, locksmiths, armorers, blacksmiths, and musicians. F. in all England, dp. 19 May. C. E.—St. —P. B.—L. S.—Hamp.—Angl.

Edmund (Edme) Rich, Archbp. of Canterbury, C. He was the son of a humble tradesman, b. at Abingdon, Berkshire, 20 Nov., 1180; with his brother Richard he studied philosophy at Paris, 1195–1202; then was "Regens in artibus" at Oxford, but left England to take up the study of theology at Paris. After 1214 he taught theology at Oxford and preached in the neighboring towns. In 1222, he was made canon and treasurer of Salisbury Cathedral. In 1227 he was delegated by the Apostolic See to preach the crusade in England. In 1233, he was elected archbishop of Canterbury and consecrated, 12 Apr., 1234. His indomitable zeal for the purity of ecclesiastical discipline amongst the clergy and laity, his insistent endeavors to impose reforms on the monastic houses, and his firmness in defending the rights of the Church kept him in continual conflicts with the monks, his own chapter and the crown (Henry III.). When a journey and an appeal to Rome (1238) brought no relief, he secretly left England (1240) and retired to the Cistercian monastery of Pontigny, France. When he fell sick there, he went to Soissy monastery (Can. Regul.), where he died, 16 Nov., 1240. He was canonized, 16 Dec., 1246. His relics are at Pontigny, where they were elevated, 9 June, 1249. F. 16 Nov. Rom. Mart.; dp. O. Cist., at Meaux and in all England; dp. maj. at Sens; at Portsmouth (Princ. Edmund, C., son of Malcom Ceanmore and S. Margaret of Scotland. He conspired with Donald Bane in an attempt to regain the Scottish crown from Duncan II, who was slain at Mondynes on the banks of the Bervie. Three years later Edgar Etheling dethroned Edmund; the latter retired to the Cluniac monastery of Montague, in Somersetshire, where he spent the rest of his days in the exercise of great austerities and begged that he might be buried in chains. D. about 1100. F. 3 Oct. L. S. App. 278.

Edmund Campion (B.), M., S. J., one of the most illustrious martyrs of the English Reformation. A native of London, educated at Christ hospital, he studied at S. John's, Oxford, and was ordained a Protestant deacon. Finding it impossible to acquiesce in the new doctrines, he crossed over to Douai and joined the Society of Jesus at Rome; he finished his novitiate at Prague, where he was ordained to the priesthood. Sent to England, he preached at London and in the surrounding towns and published a pamphlet: "Ten Reasons in Favor of the Catholic Church." He was arrested and, after many tortures, hanged and quartered at Tyburn, 1 Dec., 1581. F. 1 Dec. dp. at Portsmouth, S. J., in Bohemia and Moravia. Seeb. 382. P. B. XV. 714.

Edward, "the Martyr," King of all England; he was the son of King Edgar the Peaceful, and was crowned at the age of 13 years, through the influence of S. Dunstan, in 975; in 978, when he was seventeen, he was murdered by order of his jealous and ambitious stepmother, Elfrida, at Corf Castle, 18 March. He was not a martyr for the Christian faith, nor for right and truth in any sense; but he was a good youth and was unjustly and cruelly killed, so people looked upon him as a saint and called him Edward the Martyr. He was buried at Wareham, Dorsetshire. Three years later the body was brought to the minster at Shaftesbury, 20 June, 990. F. 18 March Rom. Mart.; dp. in all England. Tr. rel. at Sarum 20 June. Edward III, Confessor, King of England. A son of Ethelred the Unready; b. in 1003. When after the death of King Edmund Ironside the Danish invader Canute (Knud) was elected king of England, Edward, his brother Alfred, and their mother Emma fled to Duke Richard of Normandy. Early misfortune thus taught Edward the folly of ambition; he grew up in innocence, delighting chiefly in the church offices. After the death of King Canute (1035) the brothers returned to England, but Alfred died shortly after, and when Edward perceived the indifference of his people, he went back to Normandy. In 1042, he returned a second time and, with his mother, lived at the court of King Hardicanute. In 1042, Hardicanute died and, through the influence of the arrogant Earl Godwin of Wessex, Edward was almost unanimously elected king of England. He was a mild and pious, but feeble prince. Under the humiliations to which the Godwinites subjected him, his heart sought comfort in religion. Earl Godwin became his chief adviser, and two years after his coronation compelled the king to marry Godwin's daughter, the learned Edith (Jan. 1045). It is said that he never cohabited with her, having made a vow of chastity. From the control by the Anglo-Saxon Godwin, Edward turned to his Norman friends, much to the displeasure of the Anglo-Saxon nobles, especially of Godwin and his six sons. When, however, the Godwinites attacked the count of Boulogne, they were disgraced by the king and imprisoned in a monastery. In 1052, they returned by force of arms, regained their positions and compelled Edward to dismiss his Norman favorites. His remission of the odious tax called the Dane gelt, the wise laws he enacted, and his personal sanctity, made him the idol of the commoners. He rebuilt Westminster Abbey, the dedication of which took place a week before his death, and was buried in it. Heartbroken by the political dissensions around him, he died 5 Jan., 1066. He was the first English king to touch scrofulous swellings and sores for the purpose of healing them. His canonization took place in 1161; his body was elevated by St. Thomas of Canterbury, Oct. 13, 1163. It rests an object of devotion in a magnificent tomb in Westminster Abbey. A national council at Oxford (1222) commanded his feast, Jan. 5, to be kept as a holyday throughout England. F. in England, since 1161. on 5 Jan.; after 1163, also on Oct. 13. Edwen (Edwyn), V., one of the alleged daughters of Brychan, patroness of Anglesey. Some claim that she was a daughter of S. Edwin of a Welsh mother. Edwin, when still a pagan, spent his youth partly at the court of King Cadfan of North Wales. F. 6 Nov. B. G., II, 412.

Edwin, King, M., the first Christian king of Northumbria. B. about 585, son of Aella, king of Deira. In 588, when only three years old, he was driven into exile by his brother-in-law, the fierce king Ethelfrid. When King Ethelfrid was slain in the battle on the River Idle (616), Edwin regained Deira and all Northumbria, by the help of King Redwald of East Anglia. He married Ethelburga, the daughter of S. Ethelbert of Kent. After long hesitation he was baptized with many nobles at York by S. Paulinus, on Easter, 627. He fell (at Hatfield Chase) 12 Oct., 627, in battle against the pa-

G., II, 428.

Elerius = S. Ilar, or S. Helier.

Elesbaan (Ela Azbela, Elsbaa), or Caleb, king of Abyssinia, son of Tazena, grandson of Al Almed, who had obtained from Alexandria the nine saints. Supported by the Greeks he overcame Dhu Nuwas, the Jewish king of the Homerites, who had revolted against the Abyssinian yoke and persecuted the Christians (v. S. Arethas). In 530–37 Emperor Justinian sent ambassadors to him to conclude a commercial treaty. After an unsuccessful campaign against Abreha, the rebellious governor of Yemen, Elesbaan resigned (540) in favor of his son, Gabra Maskal, and retired to a cave near Aksum. D. 555 and was buried in Beth-Pantaleon. Although his name has been inserted in the Rom. Mart. (27 Oct.), it seems certain that he was not a Catholic, but a Monophysite. Mz. 24 Oct. F. in Abyssinia 15 May. P. B. —H. L.—L. S.

Elesmes = S. Adelermus, 30 Jan. P. B.

Eleuchadius, C., Bp., of Ravenna ("elected by the Dove"), he was a Greek philosopher and disciple to S. Apollinaris, successor to S. Adheritus. He had governed the Church of Ravenna during the four years' absence of S. Apollinaris and was elected successor of Adheritus on account of the miraculous apparition of a dove resting over his head. D. in 112 (chronology doubtful). The order of the divine services which he introduced at Ravenna helped much to extend the custom of singing the ecclesiastical office (the legend says that he first introduced the Divine Office in the West.) A church was dedicated to him at Classis; later on his body was brought to S. Michael's church, Pavia. F. at Ravenna (minor patron) dp. maj. 14 Feb.; at Pavia simpl. H. L.

Eleutherius, M., Bp., of Constantinople, 20 Feb. Rom. Mart. This rubric crept into the Rom. Mart. by mistake; there was one Eleutherius elected patriarch of Constantinople in 484, to replace the Eutychian Acacius, but he was no saint. Comm. P. B.

Eleutherius (Eloy), first bishop of Tournai, M. Little is known of him; the legend claims that he was a native of Tournai, born in 456, of Gallo-Roman descent; with his parents, Serenus and Blanda, he was expelled by the pagan governor and fled to Blandin (Ghent), where he was elected bishop in 487; in 496, he transferred his see to Tournai, where he worked untiringly for the conversion of pagans and Arians. He was killed with clubs at the church door by some Arians on 20 Feb., 531. His relics were brought to Douai, in 1566, to the cathedral of Tournai, in 1801. F. 20 Feb. Rom. Mart.

Eleutherius, the Persian, M.; v. S. Zoilus. 18 Apr.

Eleutherius, Bp., and his mother Anthia, Roman Mm., under Hadrian. Son of the Consul Eugenius, a cleric, he had been consecrated by the Pope and appointed bishop of Illyrium; while preparing to repair to his field of work, he was arrested as a Christian, together with S. Anthia, his mother; was dragged by wild horses and killed with clubs, his mother beheaded. Their acts are fabulous and utterly worthless. Eleutherius and Anthia were very popular saints; before Pius V their F. was celebrated in most dioceses and a church was dedicated to them at Constantinople in 400. Probably Eleutherius was bishop of Ecanum (Troja) in Apulia and preached the gospel in Illyria. His body is in S. Susanna, Rome. F. 18 Apr. Rom. Mart. Eleutherius (Eleutherus), M., Pope 175–89; b. at Nicopolis in Epirus, he was deacon to Pope Anicetus and succeeded S. Soter; he energetically combated Montanism. To him came S. Irenaeus of Lyons with a letter of his church against the Montanists and a report of the martyrdom of the martyrs of Lyons. The story related in the Liber Pontificalis of the conversion of King Lucius of Britain during his pontificate is rejected by modern critics. Harnack says that the king in question is Lucius Aelius Septimius Megas Abgar IX, of Edessa, Britio being the fortress of Edessa. The compiler of the Liber Pontificalis changed Britio to Britanio and in this way made a British king of the Syrian Lucius. The 9th century Historia Brittonum refers the story to Llever Maur. The Fathers of Ramsgate say that there is very satisfactory evidence for the trustworthiness of the tradition. Baring Gould III, 352) declares that the story is a deliberate forgery. The Roman Church venerates Eleutherius as a martyr. F. 26 May, Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin ch. (not very ancient); at Rome, dp. 27 May. In England dp. 29 May. At Velletri in the mountains of Albano near Rome a S. Eleutherius, Bp., M., is patron of the diocese. Before the reform his feast was dp. 1 cl. oct. on May 28; since 1914 it is dp. maj. on May 21. He is not the Pope and M. Eleutherius. Eleutherius, abbot of the monastery of S. Mark, near Spoleto. S. Gregory the Greek relates of him that by his prayers he delivered a boy of an evil spirit, cured S. Gregory himself of a weakness of the lungs, and raised a dead man to life. He resigned his abbacy and retired to Rome, where he died in the monastery of S. Andrew, towards the end of the 6th century. His body was brought to Spoleto. F. 6 Sept. Rom. Mart.—H. L.

Eleutherius, M., at Caesarea in Cappadocia (to-day Kaisarieh on the Halys), 2d century. Mart. Hier. F. 27 Sept. P. B.

Eleutherius, a soldier, and companions, Mm. The palace of Diocletian at Nicomedia having caught fire, the blame was thrown on Eleutherius and some other Christians. Some were decapitated, others flung into the sea and others burnt alive. S. Eleutherius is said to have been killed at Tarsia in Bithynia. His name however is unknown to Eusebius. If his martyrdom was caused by the fire in the palace, he would have suffered end of February or beginning of March. 2 Oct. may be the day of his deposition at Nicomedia. Probably this S. Eleutherius is identical with the homonymous martyr of 4 August. F. 2 Oct. Rom. Mart. Achel. 183. H. L.—L. S.—Quent. 615.

An Arab by birth, he was educated in an Egyptian monastery; driven from there by the Monophysite patriarch, Timothy the Cat, he fled to Palestine and lived in a cell near Jericho; he never drank wine. In 473, he was ordained priest by Anastasius of Jerusalem and, in 493, elected bishop of Jerusalem. Elias at first lay under the anathema pronounced by Felix III against those who accepted the Henotikon of Emperor Zeno, but he firmly resisted the Monophysite Emperor Anastasius, who, in 513, banished him for his sympathies for S. Flavian of Antioch and his refusal to keep communion with Severus of Antioch. Elias to the end rejected the Council of Chalcedon; therefore the Greeks do not consider him a saint. F. 4 July Rom. Elias, a bishop of Syracuse. F. 9 July.

Elias (Elijah), the Thesbite, prophet in the Northern kingdom during the reigns of Achab (876-84) and Ochozias. He was one of the great characters of sacred history. B. probably at Thesbe in Galaad, he was a true son of the desert, swift-footed, clad in skins and a leather girdle, dwelling in the clefts and caves of the mountains. He appeared abruptly on the scene when Achab executed many priests of God, and announced to him God's vengeance. Then he retired to the torrent of Carith, east of the Jordan, from there to Sarepta within the Tyrian dominion. On Mt. Carmel he overcame the priests of Baal, 450 of whom were killed. Persecuted by Jezabel, he fled to Mt. Horeb, where God consoled him and commissioned him to anoint Hazael king of Syria, Jehu king of Israel, and Elisaeus, his own successor. Then he induced Achab to do penance for the murder of Naboth. Like Henoch, he was "translated" from the hills of Moab, a fiery chariot and fiery horses taking him away from the earth. He was expected to return before the coming of the Messiahs. He appeared with Moses at the side of Jesus at the Transfiguration. Jews, Christians and Musselmen highly honor this prophet. Tradition says that he is to appear on earth and die for Christ at the end of time (Apoc. XI). The Carmelite monks long cherished the belief that their Order could be traced back to Elias, but they were vigorously opposed by the Bollandists; Innocent XII, in 1698, silenced both parties. Elias is patron against drouth and earthquakes. F. 20 July, Rom. Mart., dp. at Jerusalem, full office in Greek and Syriac Churches; dp. 1 cl. oct. in the Carmelite Order; principal patron of Bosnia. At Palermo, 5 March. dp. maj. (minor patron). Elisabar, M., in Georgia; v. S. Bidzini, 18 Sept.

Elisabeth, the "Wonder Worker," abbess of the monastery of Ss. Cosmas and Damian at Constantinople; she led a most austere life, possessed splendid mystical gifts and the power to heal the sick. She lived between the 6th and 9th century. F. 24 Apr., full office in Greek Church.—MGR.

Elisabeth of Schönau, V., O. Cist., one of the great mystics of the 12th century. B. at Treves, Germany, about 1129; she took the Cistercian habit (1147) at Schönau near Bingen, where she was elected superior, in 1151. After 1152 she was favored with visions, which were written down by her brother, Abbot Ackebert (Visiones, 3 vols.; Liber Viarum Dei). Eusebius Amort holds that her revelations were illusions. Suspicious are her phantastic revelations about "S. Ursula and her 11,000 Virgins," which exercised great influence on the formation of the legend. Elisabeth often and in strong language spoke and wrote against the errors of her time, but was an humble and childlike soul. Her sufferings from ill health were life-long, but borne with marvelous cheerfulness. D. 18 June, 1165. She was never formally canonized. F. 18 June, Rom. Mart. (since 1584); dp. O. Elisabeth (Isabel), Queen of Portugal, the "Peacemaker," matron; b. 1271, daughter of the Infante, later on King Peter III of Aragon; she was christened Elisabeth in honor of her great aunt S. Elisabeth of Thuringia. In 1283 she was married to King Denis of Portugal. At the dissolute court of Lisbon she was a model Christian mother, wife, and queen, a striking pattern of every virtue. Her charity to the poor and her continuous endeavors to prevent hostilities between her relatives, the kings of Portugal and Castile, were characteristic of her sanctity. After the death of her husband (1335) she retired to the convent of the Poor Clares at Coimbra and took the habit of the Third Order of S. Francis. The legend of the page of Elisabeth (cf. Schiller, "Gang zum Eisenhammer") is of later origin (1562) and is the Christian form of an old Hindu story. To her, however, belongs the story of the loaves transformed into roses, usually ascribed to S. Elisabeth of Thuringia. D. at Estremoz, 4 July, 1336. Her relics are venerated at Coimbra. Her cult was approved for Coimbra by Leo X; Urban VIII canonized her in 1625. F. 4 July and 8 July, Rom. Mart., sem. in the Latin Church 8 July; 4 July dp. 2 cl. in Portugal; dp. 2 cl. 8 July, in Aragon. Elisabeth, mother of S. John the Baptist, of the tribe of Aaron, wife of the priest Zacharias. That she was related to Mary is possible, since to marry men from other tribes was prohibited only to hereditary daughters, otherwise permitted. The Protevangel relates that when Herod sent his minions to slay the children of Bethlehem, Elisabeth with John fled to the hilly country. The legend and traditions concerning her are apocryphal; our knowledge is really limited to what we gather from the first chapters of S. Luke's Gospel. F. 5 Nov. Rom. Mart. dp. at Jerusalem 6 Nov. Elisabeth of Thuringia, matron; b. at Presburg in 1207, daughter of King Andrew II of Hungary and his wife, Gertrude of Andechs-Meran. When only four years of age she was brought to the Wartburg (Thuringia) and educated with her betrothed, Louis, son of Herman, Landgrave of Thuringia. Her youth was embittered by taunts and trials caused by Sophia, the mother of Louis and her courtiers; she was married in 1221 and had one son and two daughters (B. Gertrude of Aldenberg). Louis proved himself a husband worthy of her. With his permission and to his secret delight, she multiplied her works of mercy, for her love of the poor was boundless. Even in her dress she sought to be like Christ. Guided by P. Rodeger, O. F. M., and after 1225, by the austere Conrad of Marburg, she attained the highest degree of Christian perfection. After the early death of Louis (11 Sept., 1227, at Otranto, while on his way with the Emperor Frederic Barbarossa to take part in the defence of the Holy Land) she was stripped of everything and driven from the Wartburg by her brother-in-law, Henry Raspe; she found shelter first at Eisenach, later with her uncle, Bishop Egbert, at Bamberg. In consequence of a compromise the city of Marburg with the surrounding territory was given to her; she lived there in voluntary poverty and severe asceticism as a Tertiary of S. Francis; d. at Marburg, 19 Nov., 1231, 24 years old. She is one of the most attractive saints of the Middle Ages, serene, amiable, and human. She was venerated immediately after her death and canonized, 27 May, 1253, by Gregory IX. Her relics were elevated by Emperor Frederic II, 1 May, 1236. Her body was enshrined in the magnificent church dedicated to her at Marburg (built 1235–83). Philip, landgrave of Hesse, the Reformer, put a stop to the pilgrimage to these relics by secretly removing them, 18 May, 1539; some of the bones were given to Charles V., in 1547; in 1578, these were donated to Queen Elisabeth of France, who gave them to the convent of S. Clare in Vienna, founded by her. P. P. 30 Feb. 1909. Perhaps the few bones found at Marburg in 1854, are remnants of her relics. Elishus (Elisha), a prophet in Israel, son of Saphat; b. at Galgal. God selected him to succeed S. Elias; the latter called him by throwing his mantle over him; he followed his master to Bethel and Jericho and from thence to the eastern side of the Jordan. After the ascension of Elias he returned to Jericho, won recognition from the prophets of Jericho, passed some time on Mt. Carmel, then settled in Samaria. Elisha inherited the wonderful powers of Elias; after predicting Joas's victory over the Syrians, he died. His tomb at Samaria was a place of pilgrimage at the time of S. Jerome. His relics were burnt with those of S. John the Baptist; some remnants were brought from Alexandria to Constantinople, from there to Ravenna, in 718. Elphege (Aelfeath); Bp., M. He had been a monk at Deerhurst, diocese of Worcester, hermit and first abbot of Bath, the monastery which he had founded himself; in 984 he succeeded S. Ethelwold; in 1006 he was chosen Metropolitan of Canterbury. In 1011 the Danes sacked Canterbury and burnt the cathedral, carrying off the holy Archbishop, from whom they expected a large ransom; but he refused to allow his Church to put itself to such expense for him. He was therefore kept in prison at Greenwich for seven months, and, because he still refused to charge his Church with his ransom, he was tortured by the Danes, and finally done to death with a battle ax, 19 April, 1012. op, M.; b. at Poitiers; accompanied by the priest Vitalis, end of 7th century, he passed through Bavaria, to preach the gospel to the Avari in Pannonia; he was asked by Duke Theodo to stay and strengthen the newly converted people of Bavaria in their faith. After three years of missionary labors he undertook a journey to Rome, but was overtaken at Helfendorf, near Aibling, by Lantbert, Theodo's son. Upon the false accusation that Emmeram had seduced Lantbert's sister Uta, the persecutors bound him to a ladder, cut off his hands and feet, dug out his eyes and tore out his tongue. Still living, he was brought to Aschheim, but died on the way, near Feldkirchen. He was buried at Aschheim, but the body was transferred to Ratisbon after 40 days. At Ratisbon a church and monastery were built in his honor by Bp. Gaubald. His relics were elevated on Pentecost, 1894. F. 22 Sept. Rom. Mart., dp. maj. Engared = S. Ingoaldus, disciple of S. Salvius of Amiens. F. 29 Oct.—P. B.

Engelbert, 1st Bp. of Cologne, M., b. in 1185, son of Count Engelbert of Berg; educated at the cathedral school of Cologne and appointed provost in 1199, he led a worldly life. Because he forcibly defended the excommunicated Archbishop Adolf, he was himself excommunicated and deposed (1206); after his submission he was reinstated (1208) and, to atone for his sins, joined the crusade against the Albigenses (1212). Elected archbishop, 29 Feb., 1216, he reestablished law and order in his diocese, broke the insolence of the noblemen, and won the veneration of the poor by his charity. Although in exterior bearing a sovereign rather than a bishop, he did not disregard his duties to the Church, but held synods, supported the Franciscans and Dominicans, restored discipline in the monasteries, and was a warm friend to the secular clergy. In 1221 he was made administrator of the Empire for Frederic II and tutor of his son, Prince Henry. Because he resented the oppression of monasteries by their bailiffs, and called to judgment his nephew, Frederic of Isenberg, who was ruining the Minster of Essen, he fell a victim to the conspiring nobles; he was attacked by Frederic's men at the Gevelsburg, near Schwelm, and cruelly murdered, 7 Nov., 1225. S. Engelbert made amends for his human weakness by his martyrdom. The Papal Delegate, Card. Conrad of Porto, repeatedly declared him a martyr. His F. at Cologne was instituted in 1618 (7 Nov.) the Cologne Calendars 1484–1521 (Grotefend) do not contain it; later on his name was received into the Rom. Mart. His relics were elevated in 1622. F. now dp. maj. 7 Nov. at Cologne, dp. at Paderborn.—H. L.—W.W.—L. S.—H. D.

English Martyrs. They are the holy men and women put to death for professing the Catholic religion in the persecution consequent on the so-called Reformation under Henry VIII and his successors (1535–1681). They are about 600 in number. Of these 54 were beatified by Pope Leo XIII, on Dec. 9, 1886, and 9 others on May 15, 1895. Their feast is kept in the diocese of Westminster May 4, dp. maj. A brief notice of each will be found in the present volume. The cases of 253 others of these servants of God are now being officially inquired into at Rome and pending the investigation they are styled Venerable. There remain 284 sufferers, of whose claim to be regarded as martyrs the Church has not as yet taken cognizance.—Rams.—C. E.

Ennodius Magnus Felix, Bp. of Pavia, rhetorician and ecclesiastical writer. B. of a noble family, at Arles, France, in 473, but educated at Milan, Italy; he married and gave himself entirely to the pleasures of this world; converted in a dangerous illness, he was ordained priest, with the permission of his wife, who became a nun. In 510, he was consecrated bishop of Pavia by Pope S. Symmachus; twice he was sent to Constantinople, to demand of Emperor Anastasius his unequivocal consent to the decrees of Chalcedon (515 and 517), but without success. On the last occasion he endured much ill-treatment at Constantinople and barely escaped with his life. Returning to Pavia he labored with much zeal for the temporal and spiritual welfare of his flock. He composed some Latin hymns. D. at Pavia, 1 Aug., 521; buried in the church of S. Ephrem, "the Deacon," C., Doctor of the Church, "the Sun of the Syrians," "the Harp of the Holy Ghost." He is one of the Fathers of the Church, a great orator and a true poet, who has left us a considerable body of writings, of which his exposition of the Scriptures is the most notable. B. at Nisibis, c. 306, son of a pagan priest, converted and instructed by S. James of Nisibis. The Syrians claim that he lived eight years with S. Pshoi and the Egyptian monks and that he was ordained deacon by S. Basil the Great. When, in 363, Nisibis was lost to the Romans and fell into the hands of the Persians, Ephrem with his people first retired to Beith-Garbeja, then to Amid, at last to Edessa, where he probably founded the Persian school. D. 9 June (18 June?), c. 379. His tomb is shown in the Armenian monastery Der Serkis, west of Edessa. He is the most prolific writer of the Syrian Church and composed many liturgical hymns. He is revered by all,—Orthodox, Monophysites, and Nestorians. F. 1 Feb. Rom. Mart. in the Greek (full office) and Syrian (1 cl.) Ch. 28 Jan.; in the Syrian Ch. with S. Epiphanius, C., Bp. of Pavia. He was the peacemaker of Italy during the period of the migration of nations. B. at Ticinum (Pavia), in 437; when seven years of age he was ordained lector; as deacon he was "the foot and eye" of Bishop Crispinus, whom he succeeded in 465. After the destruction of his city (Ticinum) by Odoacer, in 476, he rebuilt it and called it Pavia. He was highly esteemed by King Theodoric, who sent him to Lyons to King Gundobad, where he redeemed 6,000 Italians from captivity. D. at Pavia, 21 Jan., 496. His body was stolen by a clerk of Bishop Othwin, of Hildesheim, in 963 (during the coronation ceremonies of Otto I) and brought to the Hildesheim cathedral; part of the relics are still in the church of S. Epiphanius, Archbp. of Salamis (Constantia), on Cyprus, the brightest ornament of the Cypriot Church and a famous Eastern Father. B. about 315, at Besanduc, near Eleutheropolis in Judea, of Jewish parents; when a boy he attached himself to S. Hilarion and later spent some years with the monks of Egypt; in 335 he founded a monastery near his home, which he governed for 30 years. In 368, he was elected Archbishop of Salamis in Cyprus. He was at Rome with S. Jerome and Paulinus of Antioch, in 382. S. Jerome calls him "Pentaglottos," i. e., speaking five languages, and "the last relic of ancient piety." He stood in such high repute for holiness of life that the Arians did not dare to banish him from his see, though they had driven almost every other prominent Catholic bishop into exile. He was a zealous opponent of Origen ("Father of all heresies") and his school and thereby came in conflict with Bishop John of Jerusalem: but he retired, when he saw how the crafty Theophilus, patriarch of Alexandria, abused him to attack S. John Chrysostom. As he was returning from Constantinople to Cyprus, he expired on shipboard within sight of Salamis, 12 May, 403. He wrote against all the heresies of his age, especially Apollinarianism and Arianism. Epiphanius taught the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, but was an enemy of the veneration of images and relics. His body is at the cathedral of Benevento. F. 12 May, Rom. Erasmus, M., at Bologna; v. S. Paulinus, 4 May.

Erasmus, a Greek M.; v. S. Pyrrhus, 2 June.

Erasmus (Sant' Elmo). Bp., M., one of the 14 Holy Helpers. His acts are worthless; they relate that he was bishop somewhere near Antioch in Syria; when the persecution broke out, he fled to Mt. Lebanon, but was found and cruelly tortured; in the night an angel transported him to Italy and deposited him near Lake Lucrino. There he was again arrested and tortured and brought to Formiae in Campania, where he died of his wounds, in 303. He is a local saint of Formiae; that he came from the Orient is pure fiction. In popular belief S. Erasmus died by having his bowels unwound and coiled upon a windlass, wherefore the Walloons call him S. Crapard = S. Windlass. When Formiae was destroyed by the Saracens, the relics of S. Erasmus were brought to Gaëta (842). He was the object of great and widespread popular veneration throughout the Middle Ages; he is patron of turners, against colic, cramps and all intestinal troubles; also of women in labor. At Naples (Sant' Elmo) he is patron of sailors; the electric rays sometimes seen at sea at ships' masts are called S. Elmo's Fire. F. 2 June Rom. Ethelbert, C., king of Kent, 560–616, the first Anglo-Saxon king to become a Christian; he was a son of Eormeric and great-grandson of Hengist, the first of the Saxon conquerors of Britain, chief (Bretwalda) of the Anglo-Saxon federation, ruling over the southern principalities of the Heptarchy. He was married to Berta, a daughter of King Charibert of France. When S. Augustine came to England, E. received him on the isle of Thanet and gave him the old British church of S. Martin near Canterbury. He had himself baptized on Pentecost 597, but compelled no one to adopt the Christian faith. He founded Christ Church at Canterbury, S. Andrew's at Rochester, S. Paul's at London, and built the abbey church of Ss. Peter and Paul's outside the walls of Canterbury. He was instrumental in bringing over to the faith of Christ, Sebert, king of the East Saxons, with his people, and Redwald, king of the East Angles. The former remained true to Christ till his death; but Redwald returned, at least in part, to the worship of Wodan and Thor. S. Ethelbert resisted the attempt of S. Mellitus, to make London the metropolitan see and thus fixed for nine centuries the individual character of the English Church; d. 24 Feb., 616, and was buried in the abbey church at Canterbury. Ethelwold, hermit. He was, for a time, monk at Ripon and was ordained priest. After the death of Cuthbert, he took possession of his cell in the islet of Farne. Ven. Bede relates how, by his prayers, he saved the life of three monks out at sea during a tempest. S. Ethelwold spent twelve years at Farne and died there, but was buried in Lindisfarne. His body was brought to Durham in 995 and more honorably enshrined there in 1160. F. 23 March.—L. S.

Ethelwold, Bp. of Winchester, C., a true reformer, the "Father of Monks." B. at Winchester, about 905; having spent his youth with S. Dunstan at the court of King Athelstan, he placed himself under S. Elphege the Bald, bishop of Winchester, who ordained both priests. He was dean of Glastonbury under S. Dunstan, 955 abbot of Abingdon and, 29 Nov., 963, consecrated bishop of Winchester by S. Dunstan, with whom and with S. Oswald of Worcester he zealously combated the general corruption caused by the Danish inroads. At Winchester he founded a school and replaced the secular canons by Benedictine monks. His labors and reforms extended to Chertsey, Wilton, Ely, Peterborough, and Thorney; to the rebellious he was terrible as a lion, to the meek gentler than a dove. He rebuilt Winchester Cathedral and transferred the relics of S. Swithun, in 971. He translated the rule of S. Benedict into English and was skilful in mechanical arts. D. 1 Aug., 984. F., end of Middle Ages, 1 Aug. in Winchester and Exeter; 21 Apr. at Westminster; Tr.

Ethian, Bp. of Donoughmore in Mughdorna, Ireland. F. 27 May.—O'H., V, 582.

* Ethiopia (Abyssinia), the Nine Saints of. About the year 480, in the time of King Ameda, lived "Nine Saints," still honored as secondary apostles of Abyssinia. They were Coptic monks, named Aragawi, Pantaleon, Garima, Alef, Saham, Afe, Likanos, Adimata and Oz or Guba. Their names vary a great deal in the sources. There seems to be no doubt that they were Monophysites. So the Copts dragged their daughter church into heresy with them. (A. Fortescue, Lesser Eastern Churches, p. 297).

Ethiops = Aethiops, M., on Corfu island. 29 Apr.

Ethnea (Eithne "of the golden hair"), V., daughter of King Laoighaire of Ireland; she was nurtured by the Druids and converted by S. Patrick, with her sister Fedelmia, at the well of Clebach, close to Cruachan Magh Ai, the residence of the kings of Connaught. Both died after their first Holy Communion. Their relics were transferred to the cathedral of Armagh. F. 11 Jan.—O'H., I, 163.

Eucharja (Agarja); v. S. Agrippas, 29 June.

Eucharistus, a shepherd, and his wife Maria. F. 29 Jan. in the Coptic Church; an old legend, known also in the West, says these two saints led a virginal life, although living in the same cabin, and by their fortitude won as much merit before God as two old ascetes who had spent decades in the practice of austere penance. The story may have been invented by some Egyptian writer.

Eucharistus, M., in Campania. 12 Oct.—H. L.

Eucharius, reputed 19th bishop of Maestricht; d. 538. 27 Feb.—H. L.

Eucharius, M.; b. at Toul (or Grand?),

Eucherius, C., Bp., of Orléans, O. S. B. Born at Orléans, a nephew of Bp. Suavaricus of Orléans; in 714, he took the habit at Jumièges; in 721, he was elected bishop of Orléans. He strenuously opposed Charles Martel, who confiscated church property for his wars against the Saracens. Therefore Eucharis was exiled, first to Cologne, then to Castle Hasbaine, near Liège; d. at Trond, 20 Feb., 738 (743?). F. 20 Feb. dp. maj. at Orléans, dp. at Liège; simpl. at Cologne.—P. B.—L. S.—Mg.

Eucherius, C., Bp. of Lyons, the greatest light of the Church of Lyons after S. Irenaeus. B. at Lyons of a patrician family; he was married and father of S. Veranus, bishop of Vence and S. Salonius, bishop of Geneva. After his wife's death (410) he took a monk's habit at Lérins, where he imitated the virtues of the Egyptian solitaries and wrote his Book on the Solitary Life and another famous one on the Contempt of the World, conspicuous not only for piety, but also for eloquence in diction and mastery of the Latin tongue. He was chosen archbishop of Lyons, about 434 and as metropolitan signed the acts of the synod of Orange (441). He is author of the Passion of the martyrs of Agaunum; with Ss. Paulinus of Nola, Honoratus, Hilarius of Arles, Sidonius Apollinaris, etc., he was connected by personal friendship. D. about 449. F. 16 Nov., Rom. Mart. dp. at Lyons and Aix.—P. B.—L. Eugene I, C., Pope, 10 Aug. 654–57; he was elected during the exile of Martin I and forcibly placed on the chair of S. Peter by the Emperor, 8 Sept., 654. Of a mild disposition, he was firm in his stand against Monothelism (which denied to Christ a human will). To come to an understanding with the Byzantine court, he sent his apocryphicarii to Constantinople; they were, however, rejected by the Monothelite patriarch Pyrrhus and Emperor Constant II. Eugene was saved from the fate of his predecessor by the advance of the Moslems, who took Rhodes, in 654, and defeated Constant in the naval battle of Phoenix, in 655. D. 1 June, 657. F. 2 June Rom. Eugene, C., Bp. of Carthage. He was elected in 481, after a vacancy of 24 years; because he converted many Arians to the Catholic faith, he was exiled to the African desert with 4976 Catholics, in 483. Conspicuous among the members of his flock who were driven with him into banishment, were the archdeacon Salutaris and the dignitary next in rank to him, Murrita, who had each twice previously suffered for Christ. Called back to Carthage for a public debate with the Arians (which was never held), E. was again banished by King Huneric (to Tripoli); after many privations S. Eugene was recalled by Gunthamund (487) and permitted to reopen the Catholic churches. By Thrasamund he was exiled to Gaul in 496; there he retired to a cell at Albi and built a monastery over the tomb of S. Amaranthus. D. at Albi, 13 July, 505. F. 13 July Rom. Eugene III (B.), O. Cist., C., Pope, 15 Feb. 1145-53. His secular name was Bernardo Pignatelli; b. at Montemagno, dioc. of Pisa, pupil of S. Bernard of Clairvaux and abbot of S. Anastasia at Rome. For him S. Bernard wrote his celebrated ascetical treatise, "De Consideratione." Immediately after his election he fled to Farfa, from there to Viterbo, where he called the second crusade, to be preached by S. Bernard, whilst Arnold of Brescia established the second Roman republic at Rome. The fugitive Pope found a refuge in France (Louis VII); then he was enthusiastically received in Germany by Emperor Conrad. He held synods at Paris (1147) Treves, Reims and Cremona (1148), for the reform of the clergy and of the monasteries; with King Roger of Sicily he concluded an alliance; in 1149 he conquered Rome, but could not hold it; not before 1152 did the occupation become permanent. With Emperor Frederic I he concluded a treaty at Constance, 23 Jan., 1153, insuring to the Vicar of Christ the protection of the emperor. D. at Tivoli, 8 July, 1153. His cult was approved 28 Sept., 1872. F. at Eulalia (Olalla), V., M., patroness of the cathedral and city of Barcelona. Since nearly all the traits of the legend of S. Eulalia of Merida are repeated in the legend of Eulalia of Barcelona, some hagiologists, e. g., Tillemont, identify both, but there is no solid reason for doubting the existence of two saints of this name. She is said to have suffered at Barcelona, 12 Feb., 305; her acts being lost, the church of Barcelona appropriated to her the legend of S. Eulalia of Merida. Her cult was approved by a synod of Toledo (633) and confirmed by Pius V. She is patroness against drouth. F. 12 Feb. Rom. Mart. dp. 1 cl. oct. at Barcelona; Tr. rel. I, 23 Oct. dp. maj.; Tr. rel. Eulogius, M. He was a native of Cordova, priest at the church of S. Zoilus and director of the ecclesiastical school (seminary) of Cordova. In the persecutions of Abdurrahman II and Mohammed, he ministered to the martyrs (850–56) whose history he relates in his "Memorial of the Saints," and encouraged them to be steadfast in confessing Christ. He was repeatedly imprisoned; in 858 he was elected Archbishop of Toledo, but was executed before his consecration, because he protected a Saracen maiden (S. Leocritia) who had become a Christian. D. 11 March, 859; he was buried in the church of S. Zoilus. The bodies of Ss. Eulogius and Leocritia were transferred to Oviedo, in 883. F. 11 March, Rom. Mart., dp. maj. at Cordova; at Oviedo, Ss. Eulogius, Melchite (Greek) patriarch of Alexandria, 579–607. He was an abbot at Antioch and one of the most celebrated bishops of his age, a courageous champion of the Church against the Acephali, Agnoites, and Novatians; he was a warm friend of S. Gregory the Great; amongst other merits the Pope makes special mention of his defence of the primacy of the Roman See. One of the epistles S. Gregory wrote to S. Eulogius contains the account of his having sent S. Augustine to England. His contemporary was the Coptic (Monophysite) patriarch Peter IV, of Alexandria; his Melchite successor was S. John the Almsgiver. F. 13 Sept. Rom. Mart.; 13 Feb. MGr.—Mz.—H. L.

Euphemia, V., M., at Vicenza; v. S. Innocentia, 16 Sept.

Euphemia, one of the most celebrated Virgins and Martyrs of the Greek Church. Though her acts are undeserving of credit, the fact of such a martyr having existed and suffered at Chalcedon can hardly be doubted, as her body was preserved by the faithful and a church built over it soon after the persecution ceased, at the accession of Constantine. She was thrown to the beasts, probably under Aurelian, because she had not attended the festival in honor of Ares. All over Christendom churches are dedicated to her, especially the magnificent church at Chalcedon (4th century) where the Fourth Ecumenical Council was held. Her relics were brought to Constantinople in 620, thrown into the sea by order of the iconoclast Emperor Constantine Copronymus, but solemnly brought back by the Empress Irene. The Greeks claim that they still possess her relics and venerate them at Selymbria, near Constantinople (at the opening of the Bosphorus into the sea of Marmora). The Latin Church contends that her relics were transferred from Chalcedon to Rome in 617. Pope Gelasius dedicated a church to her at Rome, in 490; another church was erected under her invocation on the Appian Way, in 677. Her relics are now in the Lateran and in S. Urbano. She is patroness of the theological faculty of Paris. F. 16 Sept. Rom. Mart. In Northern Europe her feast in pre-Reformation times was universally kept on 13 Apr., also at Exeter and Winchester. At Chalcedon anciently three feasts were kept: 13 Apr., 17 Aug., and 16 Sept. In the Greek Church full office, 16 Sept.; another full office, 11 July, in memory of a miracle wrought by the saint during the Council of Chalcedon. (A profession of faith of the Orthodox and another of the Monophysites were placed in the dead hands of S. Euphemia and the shrine was sealed by both parties. After three days the Eutychian creed was found at the feet of the saint, that of the Catholics still in her hands). She is principal patroness of Orense in Spain (14 Aug. Tr. rel.), of Montepeloso in Italy (11 July, solemn Commemoration, dp.) and of Antequera, Spain (city taken from the Moors, 16 Sept., 1410). In the Latin Church her feast is simpl., 16 Sept. Euphrosyne, V. (the Greeks call her "Our Mother"). B. at Alexandria, about 413, the daughter of a certain Paphnutius; to escape marriage she is said to have donned male attire and become a monk in a monastery whose abbot was her father's friend. She took this extraordinary step because she knew that her father would search all convents of nuns and drag her out. For 38 years she lived unknown in a retired cell and utterly alone, under the name of Smaragdus, and was looked upon by all as a singularly holy man. Even her father, wanting spiritual advice, was introduced to her and greatly appreciated her wise counsels. He assisted her in her last moments, and only then did she disclose her identity (in 470). After her death her father Paphnutius inhabited her cell for ten years. The story of a maiden taking a monk's habit (Monachopartheny) is old and known in the West since the 6th century. It occurs in the lives of S. Marina, S. Eugenia, etc. The Carmelites claim S. Euphrosyne as their own. Her relics were formerly at Saint-Jean-aux-Bois, diocese of Beauvais, but were lost during the French Revolution (P. B., II, 471). F. 1 Jan. Rom. Mart.; by the Carmelites 2 Jan. dp.; in the Greek Church full office 25 Sept.; 3 cl. in Syrian Ch.; 17 Sept. in the Coptic Ch. Her name is mentioned in the Proskomide of the Russian Mass. H. L.—P. Eusebius, M., Bp. of Vercelli, a champion of the Church against Arianism; b. in Sardinia, c. 283. He was lector of the Roman Church; 15 Dec., 340, he was consecrated bishop of Vercelli by Pope Julius I; he introduced community life among his clergy; the first bishop in the West who united the monastic with the clerical life. As legate of Pope Liberius he and Bishop Lucifer of Calaris obtained from Emperor Constantius the convocation of the synod of Milan (355), by which Eusebius, refusing to consent to the sentence against S. Athanasius, was banished to Scythopolis in Syria, then to Cappadocia and to Upper Egypt. On the accession of Julian the Apostate (362) he was permitted to return and sent to Antioch by the synod of Alexandria, to put an end to the Meletian schism. Unable to reconcile the factions at Antioch (cf. S. Lucifer and S. Paulinus of Antioch), he visited other Oriental churches in the interest of the orthodox faith, and finally passed through Illyricum into Italy. Having arrived at Vercelli (363), he assisted S. Hilary of Poitiers in the suppression of Arianism in the Western Church and was one of the chief opponents of the Arian bishop Auxentius of Milan. D. at Vercelli, 1 Aug., 370. Although he did not shed his blood for Christ, he is venerated as a martyr, because he suffered so much in the cause of religion. F. 15 (16) Dec., Rom. Mart. (Ordination). In the Latin Church simpl. F. 7 Sept., sem. at Beauvais.—P. B.—Mg.

Eustace (Eustathius), M., at Rome, one of the 14 Helpers in Need. His legend (a "romance of adventures") relates that he (before baptism called Placidus) was a Roman general, who was converted whilst hunting at Guadagnola, near Tivoli, by an apparition of Christ and his Cross between the antlers of a stag. Thereupon he was baptized with his wife, Theopista, and his sons, Agapius and Theopistus. Through adverse fortunes his family was scattered, but later on reunited. All four were martyred under Hadrian for refusing to sacrifice to the gods. The legend seems to be without historical foundation; only the names, the martyrdom and the cult in East and West are certain. F. 20 Sept. Rom. Mart. Eustathius, Patriarch of Antioch, one of the most prominent opponents of Arianism. B. at Side in Pamphylia, about 270; he was elected bishop of Beroea, and, in 323, reluctantly, patriarch of Antioch; in 325, he was present at the Nicene Council where he opposed the practice of transferring bishops from one see to another; 325–30 he engaged in literary warfare against Eusebius of Caesarea and the Arians; in 331, he was deposed by a synod at Antioch, called by Arian and Semi-Arian bishops, and banished first to Treves, then to Trajanopolis in Thrace. He was not reinstated, although his innocence was proven, but died at Trajanopolis in 360. The intransigent attitude of his followers (Eustathians) after his death gave rise to the Meletian schism. Euthymius the Great, abbot in Palestine; b. at Melitene in Armenia; educated by Otrejus, bishop of Melitene, who ordained him priest. He became a monk in Armenia and, on account of his conspicuous virtues and his great natural gifts, was entrusted with the supervision of all the monasteries of the district. In 406 he secretly undertook a pilgrimage to Jerusalem and remained in the Laura of Pharan for five years; then, with S. Theoctistus, he retired into a cave on the road to Jericho; there he founded a monastery, over which he placed S. Theoctistus (411). Because many disciples flocked to him, he founded his own laura near his cave (420), the great church of which was dedicated by Bishop Juvenal of Jerusalem in 428. Through love of solitude he fled to Ruba near the Dead Sea, where he worked for the acceptance of the decrees of Ephesus and Chalcedon and converted the exiled Empress Eudocia from Monophysitism. D. in his laura, in 473. F. 20 Jan. Rom. Mart.; in the Greek Church full office; dp. by the Latins of Jerusalem. His name is daily mentioned in the Greek Mass.—L. S.—H. L.—Ord. 117.—P. B.

Eve, the mother of mankind, formed of a rib of Adam who had fallen into an ecstatic sleep, on the 6th day of the Creation. Eve, like Adam, was fully developed and in the state of grace. But seduced by Satan (the serpent) she caused Adam to sin; thus sin originated from a woman; woman's punishment are the burdens of the female sexual life. According to the doctrine of the Fathers, Eve was purified with Adam, and saved by penance. Cult v. S. Adam.—Buch.—P. B. 19 Dec.

Expectatus, M., in Syria; v. S. Trophimus, 28 Nov.

Expeditus, pretended name of a martyr who, according to the Hieronymian Martyrology suffered with Hermogenes and 5 companions at Melitene in Armenia. In the present Rom. Mart. an Expeditus is mentioned, 19 Apr. The Bollandist Delahaye shows that not even the name can be established with certainty, but is a copyist's error for "Helpidi." Hermogenes and companions are unknown in Armenia. The veneration of S. Expeditus as "a sure expedient in pressing and desperate affairs" originated about 1700. In our own time Rome has taken measures against the extravagances of this cult. Expeditus is represented as a soldier; with one foot he crushes a raven croaking "Cras" (tomorrow), whilst his right hand points to a sun dial or cross which bears the inscription "Hodie" (to-day). Ezechias, king of Judah, 727–699. Leaving the ways of his father, Achaz, he was personally pious and suppressed the far-spread idolatry of the people, sanctified the temple, and restored the solemn services there. When King Sennacherib of Assyria was about to sack the Holy City, Ezechias saved it by a heavy contribution; from a second attack (701) he was delivered by a miracle; he ended his days in peace. We possess a canticle (IV Kings, 20) which he composed during a mortal illness. F. 28 July in Abyssinia; 28 Aug. MGR.—P. B.—Buch.

Ezechiel, one of the four Great Prophets and author of one of the Canonical Books of the Old Testament. He was a son of the Jewish priest Buzi; in 599 B.C., with King Jehonias and 11,000 Jews, he was conducted to Babylon. In 594, at Tel-Abib on the Kebar canal (near Nippur) he was called to the prophetic function, which he filled, up to at least 572. He worked amongst the exiles, combating their errors and vices and strengthening their faith. He has in his prophecies more visions, symbolic actions, and allegories, than any of the other prophets. The Rom. Mart. claims that he was slain by a Jewish judge, whom he had reformed for his idolatry and was buried in the tomb of Shem and Arphaxad, on the western shore of the Euphrates, near the Kebar canal. F. 10 Apr. Rom. Mart. dp. at Jerusalem; in Greek Ch. 23 July full office, in Maronite Ch. 21 July; in Coptic Ch. 31 March.—Scherm. 89.—C.E.—W.W.—Buch.

Fabianus, M., Pope, 10 Jan. 236 to 20 Jan. 250; successor of S. Antherus. His pontificate was peaceable; to take better care of the poor, he divided the city into seven deaneries, collected the acts of the martyrs (later on destroyed by fire) and reformed the administration of the cemeteries. He brought the bodies of Ss. Pontianus and Hippolytus from Sardinia to Rome; about 245 he sent S. Dionysius and six other missionary bishops to France, who founded the churches of Paris, Tours, Toulouse, Narbonne, Clermont, and Limoges. Also the rite of the consecration of the Holy Oils on Holy Thursday is attributed to him. During his pontificate the millennium of the city was celebrated; apocryphal accounts claim that he baptized the Emperor Philip the Arab. He was martyred under Decius. His relics are at San Martino ai Monti, Rome. F. 20 Jan. Rom. Mart.; dp. at Rome; 5 Aug. MGR.; 5 Feb. in the Coptic Church. Fabianus and Sebastian are Pr. Patrons of Palma (Mallorca). C. E. —W.W.—L. Fathers, six, i.e., monks, otherwise unknown, who died in peace, are mentioned in the Greek Menaea, Jan. 15.

Fathers of the Ecumenical Councils. The canons of the ecumenical councils from the very first ages were considered manifestations of the Holy Ghost and put on the same level with S. Scripture. The Greek Church introduced the memory of the Fathers who were present at these councils into the Liturgy. When, in 518, Emp. Justinus came to the throne, for the Sunday after 13 July was instituted the feast of the Fathers of the four first councils, of Nice, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Chalcedon. About 1370, a special feast of the Council of Nice was introduced for the Sunday before Pentecost. Shortly after the second Council of Nice commenced to be celebrated on the Sunday after 10 Oct. The Latin Church never adopted this custom. The Maronites have a feast to commemorate all the ecumenical councils on Sept. 15.

Fathers, Holy (Feast of the), is celebrated by the Greek Church and its dependencies on the Saturday before the Latin Quinquagesima Sunday. The Canon of the feast was composed by S. Theodore the Studite. He extols (1) 142 Ascetes, principally Fathers of the Desert; (2) 25 Holy Women (Nuns and Hermits); (3) 49 Bishops and Doctors of the Church.

Febrie, a Welsh saint, of whom nothing is known.—B. G., III, 3.

Febrithe, C., an Irish saint. F. 30 July.—O'H., VII, 508.

Febronia, V., M., a nun; 20 years old, in a monastery at Nisibis (Sibapolis) in Assyria, under the guidance of her aunt S. Bryene; she was cruelly tortured by command of the judge Selenus for professing her faith and refusing the hand of Lysimachus, the nephew of Selenus. In their fear the fifty Sisters in her community had fled to various hiding places, Febronia alone remaining with her abess and one other aged nun, Thomais, when the imperial officers came to seize them. It appears that Febronia alone was put to death and it is from the pen of the nun Thomais that we have the particulars of the ghastly tortures to which she was subjected before being beheaded, in 310 (304?). Lysimachus was converted and retired into the desert. In 363 her relics were brought to Constantinople, from there to Patti in Sicily. Her passion, by the aged nun Thomais, is apparently genuine. It is by no means improbable that institutions for virgins consecrated to God were flourishing in the East when the persecution of Diocletian broke out. F. 25 June, Rom. Felicitas and Vibia Perpetua, Mm., at Carthage. The former was a slave, the latter of noble birth; both were married; with four other catechumens: Revocatus (slave), Saturus, Saturninus, and Secundulus, after a long incarceration, they were thrown to the wild beasts and beheaded, 7 March 202 (203), at Carthage (not at Tuburbo). Secundulus had died in prison. Their touching Passion, composed by an eyewitness and interwoven with notes written down by the martyrs themselves, is preserved in the Latin original and in a Greek translation. It is colored with Montanistic ideas (the writer may have been Tertullian), but the martyrs themselves were orthodox. The names of Perpetua and Felicitas occur in the Canon of the Roman Mass. Felicitas, M., at Rome, with her seven sons (Januarius, Felix, Philippus, Silvanus, Alexander, Vitalis and Martialis), Mm. Era uncertain (162?). Felicitas was buried with S. Silvanus in the cemetery of Maximus on the New Salarian Way, where S. Boniface I built a basilica in her honor. Alleged relics of S. Felicitas are in the Capuchin church at Montefiascone, Tuscany (they belong to another homonymous saint), some at S. Susanna, Rome. Her body is also claimed by Benevento (dp.) since 839 and by Magdeburg since 964, also by S. Marcello. Her Passion is spurious, written in the 6th century. According to the acts, the mother with her sons was arrested under Antoninus (Aurelius?). Januarius was beaten with leaded whips till he died; Felix and Philippus were killed with a club; Silvanus was cast headlong from a precipice; the other three were beheaded. Felicitas died by the sword four months later. The old Roman tradition venerated Felicitas and her sons (names unknown) 23 Nov., independently of the seven martyrs of 10 July, who were not brothers and died under Aurelius; at a later time they were identified with the sons of Felicitas. The martyrs of 10 July (Januarius etc.) stand in no relation to S. Felicitas. She is the patron of women who wish to obtain children. F. 23 Nov. Rom. Felix, M., "in Pincis," at Rome; a priest, who was killed by boys with their pointed iron styli, probably on the Monte Pincio or near the Porta Pinciana. He has often been confounded with S. Felix of Nola. 14 Jan.—H. L.

Felix of Nola, priest (bishop?), M.; b. at Nola, son of Hermias, a Syrian immigrant; after serving in the army, he was ordained priest and became the adviser of Bishop S. Maximus of Nola. During the persecution of Decius he was thrown into a dungeon strewn with pot-sherds, but freed by an angel; during another persecution his hiding place was protected by a spider-web. The Church being for a time at peace, the bishopric of Nola was offered to Felix, but he refused it, preferring to occupy himself, as before, with assisting the prelate chosen in his place. Those who identify him with the principal patron of Nola, celebrated on the 15 Nov., claim that he was elected bishop of Nola and died as such at an advanced age, in 260 or later. The ancients are loud in praise of his holy life and his charity to all. On account of the many sufferings he had endured for Christ's sake, he has always been honored as a martyr. He was buried at Cimitile near Nola. His cult spread to Rome; he had a church on the Monte Pincio and was confounded with another saint of the same name, S. Felix in Pincis. He was formerly the most celebrated saint of southern Italy, in consequence of the great devotion which S. Paulinus of Nola bore to him. The latter composed six extensive hexametric poems in honor of S. Felix. His F. was celebrated at a great variety of places and dates: at Naples 13 Jan.; at Nocera 20 Sept.; at Terracina 1 Nov.; at Villa Herdonia 1 Sept.; in Apulia 2, 11, and 13 Sept.; at Potenza 26 Aug.; at Portus (Porto Romano) 16 Apr., 15 May and 21 Aug.; at Nola his passion, 14 Jan., but on 27 July Nola kept his "Ordinatio Episcopatus." Felix I, Bp. of Metz, a disciple of S. Clement of Metz, called third bishop of Metz after Paul the Deacon's time. He is said to have occupied the see in the beginning of the 2nd century, but probably belongs to the 3d century. The question of the existence or era of this saint is intimately connected with the question of the origin of the episcopal see of Metz, for which the first secure footing is found in the 4th century. Felix, M., at Adrumetum; v. S. Verulus, 21 Feb.

Felix II (falsely III), C., Pope, 13 March, 483–92; he was a Roman and had been married (alleged ancestor of Gregory the Great); he firmly opposed Monophysitism. Deceived by the monophysitizing Patriarchs Acacius of Constantinople and Peter Mongus of Alexandria, Emperor Zeno had signed a dogmatic decree (Henoticon) accepting the Nicene Creed, but rejecting the Council of Chalcedon. Zeno condemned the Henoticon (484); since Zeno and Acacius did not obey, the so-called Acacian schism originated, which separated the church of Constantinople from Rome, up to 518. He made strict regulations about the readmission of Catholics who had fallen away during the Vandal persecution in Africa. D. 1 March, 492. F. 25 Feb. Rom. Mart. dp. at Rome.—C. E.—W.W.—H. L.

Felix, M., at Antioch; v. S. Fortunatus, 26 Feb.

Felix, C., Bp. of Brescia, about 617–56. He governed his diocese during forty troublous years. He struggled successfully against the Arian bishop, introduced into the see by Rotharius, king of the Lombards, and energetically opposed the inroads of that heresy, then making its last great effort against the Catholic faith. He built several churches with the help of the Catholic Queen Theodolinda. His body was found in 1508 and brought to the church of S. Afra. F. 23 Feb. Rom. Mart. dp. at Brescia.—H. L.

Felix, Luciolus, Fortunatus, Marcia, and others, Mm. Era and place absolutely unknown. 2 March, Rom. Mart. Some martyrologists say that they suffered in Africa with Florianus, Castus, Justus, and forty companions. The Spaniards and Portuguese, however, claim them for their peninsula, as they always do in the case of homeless martyrs, believing that they suffered death at Talavera (Ebora in Carpetania), after being nailed to the cross. Felix of Cantalice, C., O. M. Cap.; b. 1513, at Città Ducale, near Cantalice, diocese of Aquila; for 20 years he was shepherd and farm laborer at Città Ducale, until, at the age of thirty, he took the Capuchin habit at Anticoli. In 1547, he was sent to Rome, where he filled the office of collector of alma (quaestor) for 40 years. He had no learning, yet learned theologians came to consult him; his special apostolate was with the children with whom he sang simple canticles which he had composed. When given anything he at once responded, "Deo gratias"; this formula became so familiar to his lips that he uttered it on every occasion; therefore he was called "Brother Deogratias"; also "the Ass of the Capuchins." S. Philip Neri had a deep affection for him. They used to wish one another "sufferings for Christ." D. at Rome, 18 May, 1587; his relics are in the Capuchin Church (Immac. Concezione). Felix I, M., Pope, 269–74, successor to S. Dionysius. He was a Roman. In 269, a synod of Antioch had deposed Paul of Samosata; this measure was officially communicated to Pope Dionysius; since he had died, Felix wrote the answer, in which he laid special emphasis on the unity of the Son of God and the son of man in Christ. He suffered under Valerian, 30 Dec., 274 (perhaps he died in peace); his solemn deposition on the Aurelian Way was celebrated 30 May, 275. Felix and Fortunatus, Mm.; they were natives of Vicenza in Northern Italy; arrested at Aquileja, they were tortured and beheaded, in 296. According to tradition the faithful of Vicenza took with them the head of S. Felix and the body of S. Fortunatus; the Christians of Aquileja kept the head of S. Fortunatus and the body of S. Felix; these latter relics were brought to Malomocco, thence to Chioggia (1110). Perhaps the group is artificial, Felix belonging to Vicenza, Fortunatus to Aquileja. F. 11 June, Rom. Mart. Felix, Bp. (falsely called Pope Felix II); he had been archdeacon of Pope Liberius; during the exile of the latter (355) he was elected antipope by the Arian faction, consecrated at Milan by the Arian Acacius of Caesarea and two other bishops, and confirmed by the synod of Sirmium. Emperor Constantius protected him and part of the Roman clergy acknowledged the validity of his ordination, but the laity would have nothing to do with the intruder. When Liberius returned, Felix was expelled from the city by the Senate and people, 2 Aug., 258. He died in exile, at Castel Ceri, diocese of Porto. He may be considered the legal vicar (administrator) of Pope Liberius. Tradition claims that he withstood the Arian tendencies of Emperor Constantius and died a martyr. His relics were found in San Cosma e Damiano, 28 July, 1582, with the inscription "qui damnavit Constantium"

Felix and Adauctus, Mm., at Rome. Felix, a Roman priest, when brought before the pagan tribunal, overturned the images of the Gods by his word. H was decapitated with an unknown Christian, who had confessed his faith when he saw the apparitors leading the priest to execution. The sentence was carried out under Diocletian on the Way to Ostia. The stranger was given the name "Adauctus" ("Added"). This story however is only a legendary embellishment of the epigram composed by S. Damasus in honor of the two saints. Their relics were brought to Eschau in Alsace (850), from there (1361) to the Cathedral of Vienna, Austria. In 1905 their basilica over the cemetery of Comodilla (on the way to Ostia) was discovered. Felix and Regula, Mm. According to a local legend at Zurich in Switzerland, they were sister and brother; advised by S. Maurice, they fled from Agaunum across the Alps and, for a time, lived in a cave in Glarus; arrested by Roman soldiers at the head of the lake of Zurich, they were decapitated and are said to have carried their heads some distance. Only the existence and the cult of these martyrs are certain; all the rest is hagiographical invention. Their F. before the reformation was a holyday of obligation for the canton of Zurich. Their cult, at Zurich, ceased in 1524; their bodies were transferred to Useren, their heads to Andermatt (1526); some relics were given to Rheinau monastery in 1734. Felix, Bishop of Thibiuca (Tubzacene, Tubzag) in proconsular Africa, M. Every effort was used to induce St. Felix to deliver up the Sacred Scriptures and other Christian books, the destruction of which was a paramount object with crafty Emperor Diocletian, but the saint remained steadfast unto death. He was sent to Carthage (24 June, 303), imprisoned, and exiled to Italy, 15 July, by the proconsul Anulinus. On the way to Rome he was beheaded at Venosa,—one of the first victims of the persecution of Diocletian in Italy, 30 Aug., 303. Ss. Januarius, Fortunatus, Septimius, and Adauctus, his alleged companions, are not connected with him. Adauctus belongs to the Roman Felix of 30 Aug., the rest to the "Twelve Brothers" of Venosa-Benevento. Probably Felix of Thibiuca was killed at Carthage and is different from S. Felix of Venosa. Felix, Bp., M., principal patron of Nola in Campania; at present the opinion prevails at Nola that the great patron of Nola is not the Felix of 14 Jan., but a Bishop Felix whose feast is now kept at Nola 15 Nov. dp. 1 cl. oct. F. of his patronage 27 Apr. dp. maj.; this Felix however may be identical with the saint of 14 Jan.—H. L.—Off. pr.

Felix of Valois, C., founder of the Trinitarians. B. near Paris, in 1127; he is surnamed "of Valois," because he was born in the province of Valois (Isle de France); his alleged kinship with the royal house of Valois is very doubtful. He led a solitary life in the forest of Cerfroid (Gandelu), diocese of Meaux, where S. John de Matha joined him. In consequence of visions, they founded the Order of the Trinitarians and in the winter of 1197-98, went to Rome together, to obtain the approbation from Innocent III. The scope of the new order was the great work of charity of that age, the freeing of the Christian captives held in slavery by the Moors of Spain and Northern Africa. The constitution drawn up by Eudes de Sully (bishop of Paris) and the abbot of S. Victor, was confirmed 17 Dec., 1198. Whilst S. John resided at Rome, Felix worked in France for the spiritual solidification of his institute, which 40 years later had 600 monasteries in almost every part of the world. D. 4 Nov., 1212, at Cerfroid. The Trinitarians claim that Ss. Felix and John were canonized by Urban IV, in 1262. Their cult was approved in 1686. F. since 1219 in the diocese of Meaux 4 Nov.; transf. to 20 Nov. in 1679; extended to the entire Latin Church in 1694 dp.; by the Trinitarians dp. 1 cl. oct.; at Palermo min. patr. dp. maj. Ord. Ferdinand III, king of Castile and Leon, C.; b. 1198, as son of Alfonso IX of Leon and Berengaria of Castile; crowned king of Castile, 31 Aug., 1217, he united in his hands both kingdoms after his father's death (1230), though not without civil strife. In a war against the Moors (1222) he conquered Cordova (1236), Murcia, Jaen, Seville (23 Nov., 1249) and Cadiz, threw the enemy back upon Granada and Alicante, and gave the death-blow to their rule in Spain. He purified the great Mosque of Cordova, founded the cathedral of Seville and the university of Salamanca; he reestablished Catholic worship, built churches and monasteries, and endowed hospitals. Indulgent towards the Jews and Moors, he was intolerant against heretics. He fasted strictly, wore a rough hair shirt, and often spent whole nights in prayer; in the turmoil of the camp he lived like a monk. Above all he was heedful to do no wrong to the least of his subjects. His saying when refusing to burden them with an exorbitant war-tax characterizes him: "God will not fail me, and I fear the curse of one old woman more than the whole army of the Moors." D. of dropsy at Seville, 30 May, 1352. His body is in the cathedral; canonized 1671. F. 30 May Rom. Mart.; at Seville (principal patron) dp. 1 cl. oct.; dp. O. F. M. A., in Japan; b. at Ballesteros, archdiocese of Toledo, in 1575; he took the Augustinian habit at Mentilla, was professed 9 May, 1594, and finished his studies at Alcalá. In 1603, he was sent to Mexico, in 1605 to Japan (as vicar provincial); having worked at Ozaka, he was beheaded at Omura, 1 June, 1617. Beatified 6 July 1867. F. 3 June dp. O. S. A.; 1 June in the diocese of Ciudad Real.—Seeb. 299.—Jap.

Ferdinand the Constant (B.), C.; b. at Santarem, Portugal, 29 Sept., 1402, son of King John I, of Portugal; he went to Africa with his elder brother, Henry the Seafarer, in 1437, to take Tanjer from the Moors. But the Portuguese were defeated and even compelled to give up Ceuta. Since the Cortes of Portugal rejected the treaty offered by the Moors, Ferdinand, with eleven noblemen, remained as hostage in the hands of the Moors, who treated him like a slave; d. at Fez, in consequence of ill-treatment and exposure, 5 June, 1443. His cult was approved by Paul II in 1470. In 1473, his body was brought to Portugal and deposited in the royal crypt of Batalha.—H. L.—P. B.

First Fruits of Martyrs (Primitiæ Mar-tyrum), at Rome. After the great fire of July, 64, Emperor Nero, to divert suspicion from himself, declared the Christians to be guilty of the burning of Rome and turned upon their innocent heads the rage of the people. Inventive cruelty sought out new ways of torturing these victims of imperial injustice. Sewing up men in the skins of beasts and setting dogs to tear them to pieces, may find precedents in the annals of human barbarity; but covering them over with a kind of dress smeared with wax, pitch or other combustible matter, with a stake under the chin to keep them upright, and then placing them to be slowly consumed, like torches, in the public gardens of popular amusement, this seems to have been an invention of Nero's refined barbarity; and, from the manner in which it is mentioned by the Roman writers, as the most horrible torture known, appears to have made a profound impression on the general mind. Thus, the gentle, the peaceful religion of Christ was welcomed upon earth by new applications of man's inventive faculties to inflict suffering and to satiate revenge. L. S. F. 24 June, Rom. Mart. dp. 27 June at Rome in the church of the Campo Santo dei Tedeschi near S. Flavianus, Patriarch of Constantinople (446–49), M. He was a priest and sacristan of the Church of Constantinople. After the death of Proclus he was elected patriarch (446). Presiding at a synod at Constantinople, 8 Nov., 448, he condemned the archimandrite Eutyches, the author of the Monophysite heresy, and communicated the sentence to Pope Leo I, who answered by the celebrated "Dogmatic Letter." In 447, Flavianus enraged Chrysaphius, favorite of the Emperor Theodosius, by refusing him the customary (simonistic) bribe on his accession to the see, and even more by his opposition to Eutyches, the favorite's kinsman. 8 Aug., 449, Flavianus was deposed by the Robber Synod of Ephesus, excommunicated by the Monophysite patriarch Dioscurus of Alexandria, and so cruelly treated by soldiers and monks that he died three days later, 11 Aug., 449, at Hypaipa (Epipa) in Lydia, his place of exile. The Emperor Marcian and Pulcheria caused his relics to be brought back solemnly to Constantinople and the Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon formally proclaimed his sanctity (451). Later on his remains were brought to Giulia Nova (Apulia), one of his arms to Recanati. F. 18 Feb. Rom. Mart.; by the Latin Basilians dp. and at Constantinople; in Greek Ch., 18 Feb. Florianus, M., in Africa; v. S. Faustinus, 24 Apr.

Florianus, a Roman veteran, M.; he was a native of Cingoli, and held an important position at Cetium (Zeiselmauer), in Lower Austria. When the persecution of Diocletian broke out, he hurried from Cetium to Laureacum (Lorch, in Noricum Ripense, Upper Austria) to console the imprisoned soldiers; for his profession of faith before the praetor Aquilinus, he was whipped and thrown into the Enns from a bridge, 4 May, 304. His legend is not trustworthy. His body was buried by pious women at the spot where now rises the Augustinian monastery of S. Florian, near Linz. His relics, however, were not known before the 8th century. Part of his relics was brought to Cracow in 1183. The people chose him as patron against fire and drought. He is principal patron of Linz and of all Upper Austria. 4 May, Rom. Mart.; in Vienna and Passau (min. patr.) dp. maj. Guérin (P. B., V., 322) distinguishes seven saints by the name of Florian: (1) the Roman warrior martyred in Austria (Lorch); (2) the Roman martyr whose relics, in 1183, were sent to King Casimir of Poland by Lucius III. He is Pmp. of Poland (4 May); (3) the saint whose relics were transferred to Vicenza, in 1290; (4) the martyr whose relics were discovered in 1411 on the shore of Esino river, in the Marches (F. in d. of Cingoli and Jesi [Pmp.] 4 May); (5) St. Florian and his 40 companions, whose bodies were brought from Palestine to Bologna (F. 16 Dec.); (6) St. Florian, honored at Venice; (7) the saint whose relics with those of S. Forty Martyrs (Forty Knights), Christian soldiers at Sebaste in Lesser Armenia, who suffered martyrdom during the persecution of Licinius (320). They were exposed naked on the ice of a frozen pond, a warm bath being placed on the bank as a temptation to apostatize. One fell, but his place was taken by one of the guards, converted to Christianity by a vision and by witnessing the courage of the rest. On the morrow all were dead, save the youngest among them. His brave mother carried her boy after the corpses of the heroes until he expired in her arms, and then laid his body by their side. The martyrdom is securely established by Sozomenos and the homilies of S. Basil, Gregory of Nyssa, Gaudentius of Brescia, and others. The Latin and the Greek acts are recensions of more ancient acts. Genuine is the "Testament of the Forty Martyrs," recently discovered, in which they ask for a funeral in common and send exhortations and salutations. The 40 names (Cyrio, etc.) found in the Latin Martyrologies (v. Chev., I, 1100) are fictitious; only the name of the youngest, S. Melito, is known. F. in the Greek and Syriac churches 1 cl. 9 March full and solemn office, which is celebrated on Saturday between 7 and 14 March; in the Armenian Church on Saturday before our 4th Sunday in Lent. During the Middle Ages also in the Latin Church, 9 March, mostly simpl.; since 1674 (on account of the F. of S. Frances of Rome) transferred to 10 March, sem. In the Mozarabic Breviary of Spain 9 Jan. solemn office; in the Coptic Church 13 March, full office. They are Pmp. of Pisa. Ruin. 543.—P. B.—H. L.—C. E.

Four Crowned Martyrs, Ss. Sempronianus (Symphorianus), Claudius, Nicostratus (Costianus) and Castor (Castorius, Clemens). They were Roman sculptors, working in the public quarries in Lower Pannonia, under Galerius. Because they refused to carve a statue of Aesculapius and to adore the sun, they, with Simplicius (a sculptor converted by them), were whipped and thrown into the Danube (or Save) in a lead coffin. Their bodies were brought to Rome and buried on the Labican Way (ad duas lauros). They were held in great veneration at Rome; in the 4th century a basilica was erected in honor of the four original sculptors. Later on two groups were formed of the Pannonian martyrs: the five martyrs of Pannonia and four Roman martyrs whose names were unknown. With these alleged Roman martyrs were confounded the four soldiers (Cornicularii) of Albano: Severus, Severianus, Carpophorus, and Victorinus (8 Aug.). Leo IV (847–55) brought the relics of the four (five) Pannonian martyrs to their own church (Quattro Coronati) on the Coelian Hill, erected by Pope Miltiades. The legend of the Roman Breviary, which claims that the martyrs of Albano (8 Aug.) are the Quattro Coronati, is untenable. The Liberian Cal. (354) gives approximately the genuine names (8 Nov.): Clemens, Sempronianus, Claudius, and Nicostratus. The Gelasianum calls them: Costianus, Claudius, Castorius, and Simpronianus. F. 8 Nov. Rom. Mart.; simpl. in the Latin Church.—Lins. 215.—Passions, 328.—P. B.—Quentin 504.

France, A Feast of the Guardian Angels of France is found in the Breviary of St. Malo, 1768.

Frances of Rome (Francisca Romana), matron and foundress of the Oblates of Tor de' Specchi, Rome, affiliated with the Olivetan Order of B. Bernard Tolemei. B. at Rome (1384) of the noble family dei Bussi di Leoni; married to Lorenzo dei Ponziani (1395), she became mother of six children. Favored by God with the gift of absorbing prayer, she nevertheless acted on her own axiom: "A wife is bound to leave her devotions at the altar and to find God in her household work." A model to the Roman matrons of her time, she did much to correct their luxurious and idle manner of life. After 1414, with her husband's consent, she practiced continency and rapidly advanced in the life of spiritual contemplation. She had the gift of miracles and ecstasy as well as of the bodily vision of her guardian angel; she also had revelations concerning purgatory and hell and foretold the end of the Western schism. She was remarkable for her patience and detachment from earthly things, exemplified on the occasion of her husband's banishment, the captivity of her son Battista, her other children's death and the loss of all her property. After her husband's death (1436) she retired to Tor de' Specchi (1437) to govern the monastic community she had founded (1433) and which was approved, 22 July, 1437. She is one of the great mystics of the 15th century. D. 9 March, 1440, at Rome. She was canonized on 29 May, 1608. Her relics were elevated 1 Apr., 1638, and brought to a new sepulchre, 6 June, 1869, in S. M. Nuova (now S. Francesca Romana). F. 9 March Rom. Frances de Chantal, v. S. Jane Frances.

Frances Mizzocca (B.), matron, M., 3rd O. P., in Japan. She was the wife of B. Leo; for sheltering the missionaries in her house at Nagasaki, she was burned alive, 17 Aug., 1627. Beatified 6 July, 1867. F. 1 June dp. O. P.—Jap.

Frances d'Amboise (B.), matron, duchess of Brittany. She was a daughter of Louis d'Amboise, viscount de Thouars; when 15 years old, she was married to Duke Peter II of Brittany (d. 1457); by her gentleness she changed the morose disposition of her husband and induced him to do penance for his former dissolute life. In 1460, she founded the first convent of the Carmelite nuns in Brittany, at Vannes, and took the veil there herself (1467); she was appointed prioress at Nantes, in 1476; d. at Nantes, 4 Nov., 1485. Cult approved by Pius IX. F. 4 Nov. dp. O. Carm., at Rennes, Nantes, and Saint-Brieuc.—Seeb. 263.—F. J.—Red. 420.

Franchildis = S. Framechildis.

Francis de Sales, C., Bp. of Geneva and Doctor of the Church. B. 21 Oct., 1567, in Castle Sales, near Annecy; his father was John, Lord of Sales, and of Boisy, of Balleyson and of Ville-Rouget. Francis made his higher studies 1578–84 at Paris (where he took the vow of virginity) and at Padua, 1584–1590. He entered the clerical state against his father's will; 7 March, 1593, he was appointed provost of Annecy cathedral, 18 Dec., 1593, ordained priest. He undertook the task of bringing back the inhabitants of the Chablais from Calvinism to the Church, which he accomplished in four years by his wonderful patience and gentleness and the efficient assistance of the duke of Savoy. In 1599, whilst at Rome, he was nominated coadjutor of the bishop of Geneva, Claude de Granier. In 1602; he preached the Lenten sermons at Paris, gaining great favor with King Henry IV. 8 Dec., 1602, he became bishop of Geneva; he opened a seminary at Annecy, established conferences and annual synods for the priests, and insisted on catechizing and simple preaching. In the famous controversy on grace he favored Molinism, but advised Paul V to impose silence on both parties. In 1604, at Dijon, he became acquainted with S. Jane de Chantal, for and through whom he founded the Visitation Order for nursing the sick and for teaching. In 1617 and 1618 he preached during Lent at Grenoble, in 1619 at Paris; in 1622, he accompanied the duke of Savoy to a conference with Louis XIII, at Avignon and Lyons; d. at Lyons, 28 Dec., 1622. His body was buried in the church of the Visitation at Annecy 29 Jan., 1723. It was brought to the new sanctuary near Annecy 2 Aug., 1910. Beatified 18 Dec., 1661. Canonized 19 Apr., 1665. Declared Doctor of the Church, 19 July, 1877. His best known works are "Philothea," or "Introduction to a Devout Life," and "Theotimus," a treatise on the Love of God. In the words of St. Paul he made himself "all things to all men"; his characteristic virtue was unflagging zeal tempered by unconquerable gentleness. He is the "Gentleman Saint," a model for every priest and bishop. F. 28 Dec. and 29 Jan. Rom. Mart.; 29 Jan. dp. in Latin Ch. (since 1666); dp. 1 cl. oct. in dioceses of Geneva and Annecy (principal patron); also in the archd. of Cincinnati, by the Salesians of Dom Bosco and the Visitandines; by the Barnabites dp. 2 cl. He is the patron of Catholic journalists. F. Tr. rel. 6 Sept. at Prato. The Visitandines commemorate his death 28 Dec. S. Francis belonged to the Third Order of the Minimi of S. Francis de Paola, wherefore his F. is dp. 2 cl. in their Calendar.—C. E.—W.W.—L. S.—Biogr.

Francis of S. Michael, M., a lay brother O. F. M.; b. at Parilla, near Valladolid; in 1593, he accompanied S. Peter the Baptist from Manila to Japan; was arrested with him at Verela (8 Dec. 1596) and crucified 5 Feb. 1597. Beatified, 1627, canonized, 8 June, 1862. F. (Jap. Mm.) 5 Feb. dp. maj. O. F. Francis Blanco, M., O. F. M., in Japan; b. near Monterey, Galicia, Spain; he studied at Salamanca, took the Franciscan habit at Villalpando; from Pontevedra he followed some missionaries to Mexico (Churubusco), was sent, with S. Martin of the Ascension, to Manila, from there to Japan (1594), and was crucified with S. Peter Baptista and 24 companions at Nagasaki, 5 Feb., 1597. Canonized, 8 June 1862 (v. Peter Bapt. 5 Feb.)—F. 5 Feb. in d. of Orense.—Seeb. 179.

Francis de Paola, C., founder of the Order of the Minims. B. of poor parents at Paola in Calabria (1416); from his 14th year he lived as a hermit on the sea coast near Paola. For his followers and disciples, who first called themselves "Hermits of S. Francis of Assisi," later on "Minimi" (the "Least" in the house of God), he founded a monastery near Paola, about 1454. He obliged his monks to a perpetual Lent by a fourth vow. In its beginning the rule allowed only one priest in each convent. Sixtus IV approved the austere rule of the new Order, 23 May, 1474. In 1482, by command of Sixtus IV, Francis went to France to assist, at Plessis-les-Tours, the dying King Louis XI (d. 30 Aug., 1483). He was highly esteemed by Charles VIII and Louis XII, who would not permit him to return to Italy; d. at Plessis, 2 Apr., 1507. His body was burned by Calvinists at Plessis, in 1562. He was canonized 1 May, 1519. F. 2 Apr. Rom. Mart. dp. in the Latin Church (abolished by Pius V, but restored by Sixtus V, in 1585).

Francis de Geronimo, C., S. J., apostle of Naples. B. at Grottaglie, diocese of Taranto, 17 Dec., 1642; he studied at Taranto and Naples and was ordained priest in 1666; in 1670, he joined the Society of Jesus; one of the most eloquent preachers of his time, he gave missions in the province of Otranto, 1671-74, and in the city and the provinces of Naples, 1675-1716, where he reformed the "Oratorio delle Missioni." He had a great devotion to the Egyptian martyr S. Cyrus (31 Jan.), with whose relics he performed many miracles. By his pathetic sermons he converted numberless obdurate sinners; he also applied himself to the care of galley-slaves, of all the poor and miserable. He was called "Apostle, Prophet, Father of the Poor, Wonder Worker." D. at Naples, 11 May, 1716. Beatified 19 March, 1806; canonized 26 May, 1839. F. 11 May Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. at Taranto and S. Francis (Ascanio) Carracciolo, C., co-founder and second general of the Minor Clerks Regular; b. in Villa Santa Maria in the Abruzzi, diocese of Trivento, 13 Oct., 1563, of the Pisquizio branch of the Neapolitan princes of Carracciolo. In 1585, during a terrible skin disease, he vowed himself to the exclusive service of God, went to Naples to study theology and was ordained to the priesthood (1587). He assisted in drawing up the rules for the new Congregation of the Minor Clerks Regular, which was approved by Sixtus V, 1 July, 1588. After the death of John Adorno (1593) he was chosen general at S. Maria Maggiore in Naples; he inaugurated houses in Rome, Madrid, Valladolid, and Alcalá; d. at Agnone in the Abruzzi, whilst opening a house there, 4 June, 1608. His relics are at Naples (S. M. Maggiore, Monteverginello) and at S. Lorenzo in Lucina, Rome. He was beatified by Clement XIV; canonized 24 May, 1807. F. 4 June Rom. Mart.; dp. in the Latin Church (since 1807); dp. maj. Francis Rod, M., O. F. M.; b. at Brussels, he took the Franciscan habit at Gorkum, Holland. Shortly after his ordination he was hanged by the Calvinists, at Briel, 9 July, 1572. (v. S. Nicholas Piek). F. 9 July.

Francis Solano, C., O. F. M., apostle of Peru and Wonder Worker of the New World. B. at Montilla, diocese of Cordova, 2 March, 1549. Educated by the Jesuits, he took the habit of S. Francis at Montilla (1568). After 1576 he was master of novices at Arifazza; a pestilence having broken out at Granada, he braved all dangers and gave overwhelming proof of the unbounded charity which animated him. In 1589 he crossed the ocean to Peru and was sent to Rio de la Plata, where he worked with great success amongst the Indians, whom he attracted by playing the violin. Later on he gave his labors to the Spanish colonists at Lima and Trujillo. He shrank from no sacrifice and feared no danger. D. at Lima, 14 July, 1610, was beatified in 1673 and canonized 27 Dec., 1726. F. 24 July Rom. Francis of Assisi, C., founder of the three Seraphic Orders, styled "the Poor Man (Poverello) of Assisi." B. at Assisi, in 1182, as son of the rich merchant Pietro Bernardone and his wife Pica; he was christened "John," but because of his knowledge of French his friends called him "Francesco," the "Frenchman." After a moderate education he remained in his father's business (cloth-trade), until he was twenty. He loved music, poetry, and cheerful feasts in jovial company, but he never gave himself up to the sin of lust and was charitable to the poor. In 1201, during a war between Assisi and Perugia, he was kept in prison for a year and a fever gave to his soul a spiritual trend. Having passed through a short temptation to go to war in Apulia, he gave himself entirely to God, left all worldly pursuits, and spent his days in prayer, works of charity, and penance. His angry father disinherited him; Francis joyfully gave up everything in presence of the bishop of Assisi; thenceforth he devoted himself to the service of the poor, living a life poorer even than theirs. He lived in solitude for two years, restoring the church of San Damiano in the town, also the little chapel of Our Lady of the Angels (Portiuncula) in the plain below Assisi. 24 Feb., 1209, in Portiuncula chapel, he heard the words by which Jesus sent out his disciples; applying them to himself, he went forth preaching peace, charity, and penance, dressed in the tunic of the poorest peasant; some pious men from Assisi followed him and he wrote for them a simple rule (approved by Innocent III, in 1215). During his stay at Rome (1215) he met S. Dominic. Now he sent out his disciples, who multiplied with unprecedented rapidity. Francis himself travelled through Italy, Southern France, and Spain, preaching and working miracles. Poor and rich showed him unlimited confidence. In 1212, the noble virgin Clara Scifi placed herself under his guidance, other young women followed; he gave them the monastery of S. Damiano. In 1219, he held the first solemn Chapter of the Order at Assisi, around Portiuncula (at which S. Dominic is said to have been present). Five thousand brethren attended. In 1221 he founded the Third Order for persons living in the world (v. B. Lucchesio). Popes and bishops venerated him as a messenger of God. Pope Honorius (1216) gave him the Portiuncula Indulgence (?) and, in 1223, approved his new rule. He was connected by bonds of friendship with Cardinal Ugolino (Gregory IX); who was his adviser in developing and organizing the Order. The principal task of S. Francis was to follow in inward and outward sufferings his Redeemer, who sanctioned his mode of life by the seal of the stigmata, which he received, 14 Sept. 1224, on the desolate mountain of Alvernia. His missionary expedition to Egypt after the chapter of Assisi was a complete failure. Few saints have exercised such a mighty influence upon the Church and human society. Recent years have witnessed a remarkable revival of interest in the life and work of S. Francis, more especially amongst non-Catholics (Paul Sabatier). The famous Portiuncula Indulgence and the widespread Third Order of S. Francis are proofs of the enthusiastic following the "Poverello" of Assisi has to this day among both clergy and laity. D. near Assisi, 3 Oct., 1226; he is buried in his great church in the town of Assisi. F. 4 Oct. Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. in the Latin Church; dp. 1 cl. oct. in his own Orders, by the O. P. and at Assisi. Francis Borja (Borgia), C. S. J., third general of the Society of Jesus; b. at Gandia, Spain, 28 Oct., 1510, a great grandson of Pope Alexander VI and of King Ferdinand of Aragon. He was educated at Saragossa; at the age of eighteen he was placed at the court of the Emperor Charles V and soon after married Eleanor de Castro (1229) and was appointed equerry of Queen Isabel. He took part in the inglorious expeditions of Charles V to the Provence and to Algiers. When Isabel died (1539) the sight of her disfigured remains taught him the vanity of earthly greatness and he resolved to become a perfect Christian. From 1539 to 1543 he was viceroy of Catalonia, from 1543 to 1550 duke of Gandia. After the death of his wife (27 March, 1546) and one month's retreat, he made a vow to enter the Society of Jesus (2 June, 1546). He pronounced his solemn vows, 1 Feb., 1548, but was authorized by S. Ignatius to remain in the world to fulfil his obligations toward his five children and as a ruler. He left his estates 31 Aug., 1550, and was ordained priest, 23 March, 1551, at Azpeitia in Guipuzcoa. From 1554 to 1561 he was commissary of the Portuguese and Spanish provinces; 2 July, 1665, he was elected general of the Society. His chief work being to develop and strengthen his Order, he sent visitors to all the provinces of Europe, Brazil, India, and Japan. The new form of the rule, on which he labored incessantly, was completed in 1567. He established, first at Rome, then in all the provinces, wisely regulated novitiates and houses of study. His last task was his embassy to Spain, Portugal, and France to form a confederation against the Turks. By his penitent and apostolic life he repaired the sins of his family and rendered glorious a name which, but for him, would have remained a source of humiliation for the Church. D. at Ferrara, 1 Oct., 1571, shortly after his return from Rome. He was beatified in 1614; canonized 12 March, 1617. His body was brought to the Profesa of Madrid in 1617. F. (since 1624) by S. J. 1 Oct.; 1632 for Spain 3 Oct.; 1633, 10 Oct. (dp. 2 cl.; extended to the Latin Church in 1684, sem.; in Portugal (Patr. of the kingdom) dp. 1 cl. oct. In the Society of Jesus dp. maj. Francis Xavier, C. S. J., Apostle of India and Japan; b. in Javier castle, near Sanguesa, Navarra, Spain, 7 Apr., 1506, the youngest son of the Baron de Javier, Juan de Jassu; after a preliminary course of studies he went to Paris (1525), where he met the Savoyard, B. Peter Faber, and, through him (1529), S. Ignatius Loyola. He joined them in forming the Society of Jesus (15 Aug., 1534) on the Montmartre at Paris. At Venice he was ordained priest with S. Ignatius (1537). After a short apostolate in Italy, Francis was sent to India by S. Ignatius (1540); he embarked at Lisbon, 7 Apr., 1541, and, after a year's journey, arrived at Goa, 6 May, 1542. Now began his extraordinary career in India, amongst dis-solute Catholics to lead them back to a Christian life, and amongst numerous pagans, of whom he baptized many thousands, preaching in Goa and on the Fisher-Coast (1542-44), in Travancor, Manar, and Ceylon (1544-45), Meliapur and Malacca (1545), on the Molucca (Spice) Islands (1546-47), and in Cochin-China (1548). In April, 1549, he journeyed with three companions from Goa to Japan (Cagoshima). Amid many privations and bitter conflicts with the bonzes he converted a few thousand at Cangorima, Firando, etc., and returned to Goa. In April, 1552, he undertook a voyage from Goa to China, but died on the isle of Sancian, off the Chinese coast, 2 Dec. (not 27 Nov.), 1552. His body (since 15 March, 1554) is at Goa; his right arm (1614) was brought to the Gesù church at Rome. It is truly wonderful that one man in the short space of ten years should have visited so many countries, traversed so many seas, preached the Gospel to so many nations, and converted so many infidels. He was beatified 25 Oct., 1619 (F. 2 Dec., Soc. Jes.), canonized (with S. Ignatius), 12 March, 1622. F. 3 Dec. Rom. Mart.; in the Latin Church (6 Sept. 1663) dp.; by Pius X dp. maj. His relics were brought to Moustiers near Namur. He is patron of Deuren, where he is invoked against pestilence. F. 17 July dp. at Malines and Namur.—P. B.—O'H.

Frederic, M., Bp. of Utrecht. He was a native of Frisia, probably a grandson of King Radbod; educated by Bishop Richfrid of Utrecht and elected bishop in 827. He preached against the Sabellianizing and Arianizing heresies, which spread in his diocese, against the abuse of marriages between relatives, also against the marriage of Louis I (the Mild) and Judith. He sided with the sons of Louis' first wife against their father and was killed, 18 July, 838, probably by instigation of Judith or of some nobleman of Walcheren, whom he had reproved. F. 18 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. by the Lateran Canons of S. Augustine, and at Utrecht and Quito; 5 March formerly at Milwaukee and at Quito—Bat. 497.—H. L.—P. B.

Frederic (B.), provost of S. Vaast d'Arras, son of Godfrey "le Barbu," count of Verdun; in 997, he gave his possessions to the church of Verdun and, with Richard (dean of the Cathedral of Reims), took the Benedictine habit at S. Vannes, Verdun; d. at Arras, 6 Jan., 1020.—P. B.

Frederic (B.), abbot of Mariengaard in Frisia, O. Praem; b. at Hallum in Frisia; whilst parish priest at Hallum, he founded the Premonstratensian monastery of Mariengaarden; was elected its first abbot, in 1164; d. 3 March, 1175. His body was transferred to Bonne Espérance, diocese of Cambrai, 6 Dec., 1616. F. 3 March dp. at Utrecht; dp. maj. O. Praem.—P. B.—H. L.

Frederic, (B.), abbot of Hirsau; b. of a noble family in Suabia; took the habit of S. Benedict at Einsiedeln and was sent with 12 monks to Hirsau (1066) to restore the dilapidated monastery. In 1069, calumniated by evil-minded monks and deposed by the count of Calw, he retired to Ebersberg, where he died, 7 May, 1070. Comm. at Einsiedeln, 8 May.—H. L.—H. D.

Frederic, M., (B.) Bp. at Liège; son of count Albert of Namur. He was provost of the cathedral of Liège and refused to receive the simonistic Bp. Alexander (son of the count de Juliers) who had been invested by Emperor Henry V; elected bishop of Liège, he was consecrated at Reims (26 Oct., 1119) by Pope Calixtus II; he was poisoned (?) by partisans of his rival, 27 May, 1121. The Carmelites of Brussels claim that his relics were brought to their church, 11 Dec., 1612; but during the restoration of the cathedral of Reims, his remains were found. 26 Sept.,

1919. Popular cult, 27 May. P. B.—H. L.—A. B. 2. 259.

Frederic of Ratisbon (B.), C., O. S. A.; b. at Ratisbon of poor parents. He took the habit of the Hermits of S. Augustine as a lay brother and was carpenter and wood-chopper; food which he was bringing to the poor, changed into wood before the enquiring looks of the prior; angels brought him Holy Communion; d. 30 Nov., 1329. Cult approved, 4 May, 1909. F. 29 Nov. dp. at Ratisbon and by the Augustinians. Off. pr.—Acta Ap. Sed. I, 495.

Fricor (or Adrian), C., an Irishman who preached the Gospel amongst the Morini in the Northwest of France; d. about 640; buried with S. Caidoc at Centule. F. 1 Apr.—O'H., IV, 1.

Frideswide, V., abbess and patroness of the City and University of Oxford, England. She was the daughter of Didan, a nobleman, who resided at Oxford; she left the world and took a nun's veil. To escape the importunities of Prince Algar, she fled to Benson (or Abingdon) and later on to Binsey near Oxford. She was abbess of S. Mary's at Oxford, but mostly lived in the solitude of Thornbury. Her "Life" is not trustworthy; d. about 735. Her relics were elevated by Archbp. Richard II, in 1180. At the Reformation period her remains got mixed up with the bones of a runaway nun and buried. F. 19 Oct.; Tr. rel. (Sarum) 11 Feb. The monastery of S. Frideswide is now Christ Church. From the legend that God punished Prince Algar with blindness sprang the fantastic superstition, according to which the kings of England for several centuries carefully avoided living in, or even passing by Oxford, for fear of losing their eyesight. Her feast is kept by the English Benedictine nuns.—St.—L. S.—Angl.—Hamp.—F. J.

Fridolin, C., Apostle of the Upper Rhine. According to his "Life" (11th century) he was b. in Ireland and came to Poitiers, where he elevated the relics of S. Hilary and restored his cult. In consequence of a revelation, he went to Helion, Strasbourg and Coire (Chur), preaching and founding churches in honor of S. Hilary. He founded the double monastery of Saeckingen and evangelized Glarus in Switzerland and other provinces as far as Augsburg; d. on an island in the Rhine, 6 March, 6th century. This story has no historical foundation; nothing is certain but that Fridolin, coming from Poitiers established the monastery of Saeckingen, at the time of the Merovingians. He is patron of the canton of Glarus. F. 6 March dp. 1 cl. at St. Gall, dp. in Switzerland, Freiburg, Strasbourg (now 5 March), and in all Ireland.—D. G. I, 305.—Con., 121.—Ord., 181.

Frigia, Sembaria, Raraoinia, Bobilia, Vv., Mm., of the mythical company of S. Ursula; their remains were brought to the church of S. Martin, Laon, by abbot Philip of Parc, in 1166. F. 16 Oct.—H. L.

Frigidian (Frediano), C., Bp. of Lucca. He was a native of Ireland, son of Ultach, an Irish king; he was educated by S. Colman at Dromore and by S. Enda on Arran; after a Roman pilgrimage he is said to have founded Moville monastery in Down (540), but returned to Italy and settled at Lucca in Tuscany (about 560). There he was elected bishop in 566, to succeed Bishop Geminian. He wrought many miracles, and St. Gregory the Great relates that by his prayers the impetuous flood of the river Anser (Serchio) was stopped. D. 18 March, 588, and was buried in the church of S. Vincent, which now bears his name. v. L. S. III, 321. Thus the legend confounds S. Finian of Moville with S. Frigidian of Lucca. O'Hanlon (10 Sept.) entirely ignores this supposition. F. 18 Nov. Fructuosus (Frutos), Bp., Augurius, and Eulogius, deacons, Mm. Fructuosus, bishop of Tarragona, then the capital of Spain, was arrested with his deacons, under Valerian, 16 Jan., 259. They were burnt at the stake, 21 Jan. 259. Their acts are genuine. Their relics are in the Benedictine monastery near Porto Fino, archdiocese of Genoa. Prudentius composed a beautiful, but lengthy hymn in their honor, which was used in the Mozarabic Breviary. F. 21 Jan. Rom. Mart.; at Tarragona and Vich dp. maj.; at Genoa sem. 11 Feb.—Lins., 154.—Passions, 144.—Ruin., 264.

Fructuosus, Archbp. of Braga in Portugal. He was a scion of a noble family of Visigoth warriors, but left the world and founded the monastery of S. Justus of Complutum in the Cantabrian mountains of El Vierzo, above Astorga. It was called Complutum, because it was dedicated to Ss. Justus and Pastor of Complutum (Alcalá, east of Madrid). Here he was elected abbot, but resigned to lead the life of an anchorite. He composed for his monastery a rule which is severer than that of S. Benedict (Regula Complutensis). He also wrote a rule for the so-called family monasteries; in Spain, at that time, entire families adopted a monastic rule and assembled in monasteries to protect themselves against the violence of the king and the nobility. To accommodate his various disciples, F. founded nine other monasteries. When he was preparing to go to the desert of Egypt, he was elected bishop of Dumio, and, in 656, archbishop of Braga; he assisted at the synod of Toledo, in 656. His relics were brought to Compostela (1102). F. 16 Apr., Rom. Mart., dp. maj. at Braga.—H. L.—Biogr.—P. B.

Frumentius and another Frumentius, merchants at Carthage, were killed by order of the Arian king Huneric (484); also two unnamed brothers were slain after long tortures about the same time. F. 23 March, Rom. Mart.; sem. in province of Algiers.—H. L.—Comm.

Frumentius (Amba Salāma), Bp., C., Apostle of Abyssinia. B. at Tyrus in Phoenicia; under the guidance of a relative, Meropius, he and his brother (?) Aedesius made a voyage on the Red Sea. Meropius was killed by pirates, the genial young men were dragged to Hamyar in Arabia Felix. Here they spread the faith. Aedesius was ordained priest at Tyrus, Frumentius was consecrated bishop by S. Athanasius at Alexandria; they returned to the Homerites to evangelize the country. Frumentius extended his labors as far as Abyssinia; he converted the people of Axum. A tradition in Ethiopia claims that Frumentius and Aedesius were brought by pirates, not to Hamyar in Arabia, but directly to Aksum (Axum) in Abyssinia (v. L. S., XII, 650). He is regarded as the Apostle of Abyssinia and is called "Abuna" (Our Father) and "Amba Salāma" (the Father of Peace). F. 27 Oct., Rom. Mart. Fulgentius (Fabius Claudius Gordianus), C., Bp. of Ruspe in Africa proconsularis. B. at Telepte (in Tunis), in 468, as a descendant of a noble senatorial family of Carthage; he was Roman procurator at Ruspe, but resigned to enter the monastery of Byzacene, where he was elected abbot; from Byzacene, six years later, he was driven by the Arian heretics. He repaired to Egypt, but finding that country merged in Monophysitism, set out for Rome. Thence, during the first lull in the persecution, he sought again his cell in Africa. In 508, he was elected bishop of the little seaport of Ruspe. In 512, he was exiled by King Thrasimund with 60 other bishops of Northwestern Africa to Sardinia, but was recalled to Carthage (515) for dogmatic negotiations; exiled again to Sardinia (519), he built a monastery at Calaris (Cagliari). Though the youngest of the exiles, he was their mouthpiece and by books and letters still extant, confounded the Pelagian and Arian teachers and confirmed the Catholics of Africa and Gaul in their faith. He returned with the other bishops, in 523, under the mild Hilderic. Before his death, he spent one year on the isle of Circe in works of penance, but returned to Ruspe; died 1 Jan., 533. He was a staunch defender of the church against the Arian Vandals and a versatile supporter of the Augustinian doctrine on grace against Semipelagianism. He is the most eminent theologian of the 6th century after S. Gregory the Great. F. 1 Jan., Rom. Mart.; 2 Jan. dp. maj. in province of Algiers and in Sardinia. Galdinus, C., Archbp. of Milan; b. at Milan, of the della Scala family, in 1100; under Archbishops Ribald (1134) and Obert (1146) he was chancellor and archdeacon at Milan; in 1161, he fled with Obert to escape Barbarossa who, in 1162, took the city and all but razed it to the ground; in 1165 Galdinus was created Cardinal (S. Sabina); in 1166, though absent, he was made Archbishop and Papal Delegate. He encouraged the Milanese to rebuild their city and had the consolation of ministering successfully to the spiritual and temporal wants of the people. He was distinguished by great eloquence, a reformer of discipline, a champion of the Church against the Cathari (Puritans) of Upper Italy, a peacemaker between the political parties and a father to the poor. Next to S. Ambrose and S. Charles he is the most highly venerated saint of the Church of Milan. The great triad: Ambrose, Galdinus, and Charles concludes every litany of the Milanese Liturgy. On the last day of his life, although unable to say Mass, he mounted the pulpit and, having preached a memorable sermon, calmly expired, 18 Apr., 1176. F. 18 Apr., Rom. Mart.; solemn at Milan.—P. B.—H. L.—Rams.

Gallicanus Avinius, M., a Roman commander. He was consul with Bassus, in 317; with Symmachus, in 330; he directed the campaign against the Persians under Constantine; having become a Christian, he retired to Ostia, where he founded a hospice and endowed a basilica, built by Constantine. According to the legend Julian the Apostate exiled him to Egypt, where he died for his faith, 25 June, 362. Gallicanus is a historical person; he was a great benefactor of the Roman Church, but never went to Egypt, nor did he die as a martyr. At Rome a church was built in his honor in Trastevere; his relics are now in S. Andrea della Valle. F. 25 June, Rom. Mart.; dp. maj. by the Camillian Fathers.—H. L.—Comm.—Eg. 127.

Gallus, C., Bp. of Clermont; b. at Clermont, about 490, of noble parents, a scion of S. Vettius Epagathus, M., of Lyons; became a monk at Cournon; since he had a sweet voice, he was appointed singer in the court chapel of King Thierry of Austrasia. In 527, he was elected bishop of Clermont; he instituted the Mid-Lenten Rogation processions; d. 1 July, 554. His relics were brought to N.-D. du Port, in 1285. F. 1 July, Rom. Mart.; dp. at Clermont, 3 July.—P. B.—Mg.

Gallus (Gault), C., a companion of S. Fronto of Passais; b. near Treves on the Moselle, he became a monk at Micy and lived as a solitary in the forest of Concise (Laval); d. about 550. F. 9 Aug.—P. B.

Gallus, C., Bp. of Aosta in Piedmont; 9th century. F. 5 Oct.—P. B.

Gallus (Gall, Chelleh, Gilianus), hermit (not abbot), C., in Switzerland; b. about 550, in Ireland. S. Dichul (Deicolus) of Lure is perhaps his brother. He was one of the twelve disciples who followed S. Columban from Bangor to Luxeuil and accompanied him to Alemannia, in 610. When S. Columban (in 612 or 613) went to Italy, S. Gall, being sick, remained with the priest Willimar at Arbon, on the lake of Constance; later he retired to the mountains with the deacon Hiltibold, to lead a solitary life (not to preach the Gospel). He built a cell at the source of the Steinach. His "Life" is partly legendary. That he refused the dignity of abbot at Luxeuil and of bishop of Constance, that he preached at the consecration of his disciple John (a Rhaetian), at Constance, may be additions of the 9th century. D. at Arbon, 16 Oct., 627 (645?), and was buried in his cell. A church was built in his honor over his tomb; the monastery of St. Gall, however, was founded later; its first abbot was S. Othmar. F. 16 Oct., Rom. Mart.; dp. in Switzerland and Ireland, at Freiburg, Munich and Rottenburg; at St. Gallen (Princ. Patr.) dp. 1 cl. oct.—Con., 347.—W.W.—C. E.—H. D.
